Government Neglect?
Strikes Grow
Billions and Billions
Good News for 4 in 5

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

According to latest figures, about one hundred and sixteen human beings were burned alive, smothered by smoke, or otherwise killed on board the steamship Morro Castle. Many unaccounted for are probably floating around the ocean.

The usual "investigation" that has started should not confine itself to the owners, officers and crew.

If negligence or criminal neglect of safety precautions can be shown, the guilty should be punished.

There should be an investigation, by impartial men, to fix the responsibility of United States government officials supposed to inspect ships and protect lives of citizens.

If fire lines or pumps were not working, if one or more tanks full of oil were carried on the ship in position where fire might easily reach them, if any one of a thousand reckless conditions existed on that ship, THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT should have known about it and done away with it.

On December 14, 1928, after the steamship Vestris went down with heavy loss of life, Congressman La Guardia, now mayor of New York, made an excellent speech beginning, "Mr. Speaker, gentlemen and ladies of the House: It is my purpose this morning to talk about our shipping laws." He introduced a resolution demanding complete revision of laws governing inspection of ships and adequate provision for the safety of passengers.

In accordance with the national habit, nothing was done about it. The government might read it now and do something.

The textile strike grows, with 85,000 more in an allied industry threatening to go out. Strikes threaten to take from jobs more men than the government can take from the unemployed list.

The government proposes mediation and appoints a board. Mr. Gorman, strike leader, says that before mediation is considered, all mills must close down.

In many mills employes have made no complaint. In some mills they are working under contract.

And whether you believe in private ownership of property or not, all of the mills at present belong to their owners.

If employers said to strikers, "before we mediate, you must all move out of your houses," employes probably would say "no."

When strikers say "shut down your mills, and stop profits, mill owners naturally say "no."

It may be, as some suggest, that we are on our way to a new system of society, in which nobody will own anything in particular, the government owning and managing all.

If it is intended to carry out that plan, it should be announced frankly.

The government should say to the citizens, "you do not really own anything," and tell them what the ancient Czar of Russia told his Boyars, that not only all property, but every life in Russia belonged to him, and he could take the life or property if he chose.

The government will refund one thousand, seven hundred and seventy-four million dollars worth of government debts, and rejoices that it will pay only 3¼ per cent interest. Why issue more fiat bonds when plain fiat money would be exactly as good? Neither is worth more than the paper it is printed on, except for the government's signature.

During 12 years for which the new government debt obligations will run taxpayers will have to pay in interest unnecessarily $692,151,915, or compounding the interest $838,509,361.

Furthermore, the government will have to refinance this year altogether $5,369,086,400 of indebtedness and will presumably issue fiat bonds bearing at least 3¼ per cent interest. This foolishness will cost United States taxpayers in the 12 years following the issue $2,093,943,696.

'MERE INFANT' ELIMINATES EX-CHAMP

By Davis J. Walsh
International News Service Sports Editor

Brookline, Mass., Sept. 11—Hard upon the heels of Francis Ouimet's elimination by the unknown Bobby Jones yesterday, Johnny Goodman, 1933 national open champion, passed out in second round of the nation amateur golf championship today, yielding to arrant obscurity by the name of Bobby Jacobson, Deal, N. J. Apparently, it pays to be named Bobby.

EXTRA HOLE MATCH

Anyhow, Jacobson disposed of Goodman in a great extra hole match, the final score being 1 up, 19 holes.

Johnny was lucky to get that far, at that, it being necessary for him to hole a 20-footer on the seventeenth to square the match. Playing the first extra hole, he spanked a long, straight tee shot but he over-played his second well into the rough. Jacobson, meantime, was straight with two shots to be just short of the green. Then this young man whom Craig Wood, the professional, has been grooming for this tournament, hit a beautiful pitch and run to the pin,

FRED WRIGHT

Fred Wright of Boston, left, and Johnny Goodman of Omaha, right, two of the principal threats in the United States amateur golf play at The Country Club, Brookline, swung out of step in the throne fight this morning. Chris Carr of Buffalo downed Wright, 2 and 1. Bobby Jacobson of New Jersey, 16 years young, upset Goodman, 1 up, 19 holes. Many other "unknowns" toppled ranking favorites in the thrilling tourney. HAVANA POLICE BAR REDS FROM LINERS

By International News Service

Havana, Sept. 11—Determined to sift to the bottom reports that sabotage caused the fire that destroyed the Ward Liner Morro Castle and to take steps to prevent such acts in the future, Captain Oscar Hernandez of the port police today clamped down upon Havana harbor the most drastic peace-time restrictions in Cuban history.

All passes, including those of newspaper reporters, were cancelled, preventing all persons not directly connected with shipping activities from boarding vessels. Even officials who are off duty were barred from going aboard ships.

Because of the admitted presence in the ranks of Havana stevedores of many radicals regarded by the authorities as dangerous, rigid supervision of all workmen employed in the loading of vessels was inaugurated.

Porters were specifically forbidden to carry baggage farther than the gang-plank. Only certified employes of the ships would thus be permitted to carry luggage on board. Arrangements also were made for the inspection of baggage at the gang-plank.

Lifeboat Took 30 in Crew But Only Two Passengers

New York, Sept. 11—Chief Engineer Eben S. Abbott, the first witness called today at the federal inquiry into the Morro Castle disaster, testified there were 32 persons in the lifeboat in which he left the ill-starred ship and that only two of them were passengers.

The chief engineer, a dark-complexioned man of about 55, said he was asleep when the fire broke out. He admitted he did not go to the engine room. He said he telephoned there when he heard the alarm and they told him "everything was all right."

He said he did all he could to help passengers. He declared that Acting Captain William F. Warms told him then the flames were raging across the ship's superstructure to "take that boat." He got in lifeboat No. one.

Dickerson N. Hoover, chairman of the board of inquiry, asked him who were in the life boat when he got in.

The witness replied there were about thirty-two persons in it. Two of them were passengers—Dr. Cochrane and a lady.

Q. Only two passengers, the rest crew?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you in command of the lifeboat?

No Other Passengers In Sight on Deck

A. No, I was knocked out by the fumes. The quartermaster was in charge.

Q. I want to know why that boat took off with you as an officer in it and with only two passengers?

A. There were no other passengers around the deck. We could not get down to the lower decks where the passengers were because of fire sweeping across the ship. We couldn't get any others.

Q. How many could the boat carry?

A. Fifty-eight, I believe.

4 INJURED IN LOWELL BLAST

Lowell, Sept. 11—Four persons, two of them girl employes, were burned and injured today in an explosion and fire at the Heinze Electrical plant in Lawrence street.

The blast blew out all windows in the plant, dropped part of the third floor to the second and was felt even in the old, unused United States Cartridge Company building a short distance away, windows being shattered in that structure.

Except that the explosion came shortly after noon, many other workers in the electrical plant might have been injured.

Those most seriously injured were Leo Paquette, 33, of Varley avenue; Miss Lucienne M. Desfradas, 19, of 24 White street, and Miss Dora Lemire, 20, all employes, and Richard D. Marshall of Ladder 1.

Hot paint and wooden splinters bowled th egirls out of their chairs, leaving them lying on the only section of the floor which did not drop.

Firemen, responding to two alarms, rescued the workers from the debris, Ladderman Marshall suffering a severely lacerated hand.

7 Barbers Fined for Dirty Shops

Seven Arlington barber shop proprietors were fined $5 each today in East Cambridge Court after pleading not guilty to charges of keeping unclean and unsanitary shops. The case of a barber employed by one of the shops was placed on file after he pleaded not guilty to the same charge.

Edward H. Toohey, state inspector, made the complaints against the shop owners and the barbers, and declared he found soapy mugs, dirty tooks and other violations.

"I'LL CHANGE CAPTAIN WARMS' STORY" DECLARES ALAGNA

New York, Sept. 11—A bitter clash in testimony on the Morro Castle disaster was awaited today, with the appearance before the federal grand jury of George F. Alagna, first assistant radio operator of the ill-fated liner.

Flat contradiction of Captain William F. Warms' statements, made at the federal board of inquiry, was promised by Alagna, who asserted that he was "certain" considerable delay elapsed before the sending of an SOS. He declared:

"When I go before the federal grand jury today, my testimony will conflict with some of Chief Officer Warms' testimony before the federal board of inquiry. I feel certain that a considerable time elapsed before he ordered an SOS sent out at my many pleadings."

Alagna's Charges Likely to Split Wide Open Probe of Tragedy

The serious implications in Alagna's story were expected to split wide open the probe of the tragedy that took an estimated toll of nearly 200 lives.

Alagna graphically described the general confusion that resulted in the appalling death loss on the cruise ship in an article written exclusively for Universal Service.

Assistant United States Attorney Louis Mead Treadwell, after listening to Alagna's story, arranged to have him repeat his observations before the federal body.

Reading the testimony of Captain Warms' before the board, Alagna said:

"I will make many startling charges before the grand jury about the lack of training of the crew. I also will reveal conditions about the system of fire drills.

"I don't want to go into detail about Chief Officer Warms' or any other officer's story until I am called to testify. Anything I say at this time would simply give them a chance to be on their guard."

Warms, of the ill fated liner Morro Castle took the stand at the inquiry at New York to tell of the fire that destroyed the ship and took the lives of scores. Radio Assistant Claims Captain Delayed Sending Out SOS Call Alagna, in his account given Universal Service, pictured the confusion that reigned aboard the liner as flames raced through the decks and smoke and cries filled the air.

He told how he and Chief Radio Officer, George White Rogers, fought together to hold their posts in the wireless room until conditions became unbearable. Then, describing how he raced to Captain Warms on the bridge, Alagna said:

"I asked:

" 'Well, how about some orders. Rogers can't remain in the radio room much longer. The smoke and heat are terrific.' "

"Warms asked:

" 'Can you send an SOS?' "

"I replied:

" 'Certainly, we have been waiting for such an order.' "

"He said:

" ' All right, send an SOS.' "

The SOS Alagna stated, was sent out at exactly 3:25 a. m., standard time, or just 29 minutes after he had awakened to find flames and smoke bringing virtual chaos aboard the liner.

GAINS IN GREATER BOSTON SCHOOLS REPORTED

With registration ended, thousands of Greater Boston boys and girls settled down today to the first real day of school work today, filled with envy for their Boston playmates whose summer vacation does not end until tomorrow.

With few exceptions, increased enrolments were reported in the cities and towns. In Wellesley, more than 2510 pupils are expected to attend the town's 10 schools.

Although total enrolment in the Lynn public schools, opening of which was postponed until tomorrow because of the Jewish holidays, is expected to show a decrease, the senior high school will have about 100 more pupils.

In Melrose, Arlington, Bedford, increases in pupils were registered.

The largest student body in years was anticipated in Newton, with almost 12,000 pupils already attending. A double session for the kindergarten was already found to be necessary.

Two sessions were also in order for the Watertown senior high school, with a total enrolment for all schools there of 5700, an increase of 100 over last year.

WOMAN FALLS 10 STORIES TO DEATH

From a 10th floor window of the Oliver Building Annex at 35 Batterymarch street, Mrs. Catherine Mitchell, 43, of Washington square, Salem, plunged to her death today into the street.

In her fall, which police believe was accidental, the woman nearly carried down with her a window washer standing on a sixth story sill, and just missed a man on the sidewalk.

BODY STRIKES AUTO

By less than three feet she missed A. E. Botham of 50 Congress street as Botham stepped from the street to the sidewalk.

Mrs. Mitchell's body struck the rear bumper and license plate of an automobile parked at the curb and which Botham had just passed.

The woman was employed in the offices of Anderson Clayton & Company, cotton brokers, on the 10th floor of the annex, where she was secretary to Ralph Lawson, assistant manager.

GONE IN 3 MINUTES

Mrs. Mitchell went into Lawson's private office, while the daughter went to her own desk in the outer office to prepare for the day's work.

Less than three minutes later, the daughter went into her mother's office and found her missing. Her hat and coat were on a desk and the window was open from the bottom.

Screaming, Eileen ran back into the outer office, where she collapsed as other workers for the firm reached her.

Meanwhile in the street below, the crumpled body of Mrs. Mitchell lay on the pavement a few feet out from the curb, with hundreds of office goers gathering in Batterymarch street and with police arriving from Milk Street station, only a couple of blocks away.

The body was identified as that of Mrs. Mitchell by the building superintendent and by some of her fellow-workers. Then it was taken to northern mortuary.

POLICE THEORY OF FALL

The mother's usual routine, the office workers said, was to throw open the window in the private office, opening it both at the bottom and the top.

In the past she has had difficulty in lowering the upper sash, which sticks, they said, and others of the staff have assisted her.

Police believe that today she opened the lower part of the window, which is only two feet from the floor, and then, while attempting to open the upper half, she slipped and fell through.

War Flier's Prize Citation Stolen

North Tonawanda, N. Y., Sept. 11—Charles Bessey, World War flier, appealed to police to recover a highly prized war decoration, stolen with other personal property from his auto here.

Bessey, associated with a Wilmington, Vt., concern, told police he was particularly concerned over the loss of the decoration—a pair of wings—as he is the only one alive of three aviators in the American air force in France to be so decorated.

Brann Wins in Maine Vote By 33,000; Beedy Loses and the end of 50 years of Hales in national senate seats was at an end.

Re-electing Louis J. Brann, a Democratic Governor, by a landslide, electing two Democratic Congressmen and voting three to two for repeal of prohibition, voters of the Pine Tree State anyway had given the Roosevelt "New Deal" an emphatic endorsement at the polls.

Party hopes for the defeat of Hale were based upon the fact that while he led by 1,300 votes in his contest against F. Harold Dubord, former Mayor of Waterville, on the face of latest returns strongly Democratic precincts in far North Aroostook County were yet to be heard from, precincts that in 1932 really gave Governor Brann his first victory.

With 20 of the 631 election precincts in the state missing, the figures were:

Hale (R) 136,879; Dubord (D) 135,521. This contrasted with a 70,000 Hale victory in the last election.

RECOUNT PROPOSED

Democratic leaders decided that if on the face of final returns Hale shows a lead there shall be prompt demand for a recount. Republicans also in view of the evident close vote said they would make similar preparations if necessary.

Republicans recaptured one of the three Maine seats in Congress. Former Governor Ralph O. Brewster (R) continued his political feud with Representative John G. Utterback (D) by winning 44,960 to 42,340.

It was the first time a Democratic governor in Maine had won reelection in 82 years.

Representative Carroll L. Beedy, Republican with 14 years service, "Dry," and foe of the "new deal" lost to Democratic Simon M. Hamlin, South Portland teacher and self-styled dirt farmer. The latest figures in the first congressional district gave: Hamlin 48,156 and Beedy 46,518.

Carrying to victory along with his neighbor Governor Brann, Congressman Edward C. Moran (D) of Rockland, received 52,466 votes in the second congressional district over 46,496 for Judge Zelma Dwinal (R).

DRY REPEAL VOTED

BOND ISSUES VOTED

Returns from nearly every county indicated that the electorate had approved referendum proposals for a $2,00,000 bond issue to construct and improve state buildings and to increase the temporary borrowing limit of the state from $800,000 to $2,000,000.

Returns from 243 of 631 precincts gave for the bond issue 32,773, against 27,895, for debt increase 31,989 against 25,027.

Similar proposals were voted down in 1932.

NEW BLOODSHED FEARED; FLYING SQUAD FOILED

Following violence in the early morning hours, the textile strike continued to spread in New England today with the first picket line established at Lawrence and national guard troops called out in Maine, Rhode Island and Connecticut.

The total idle increased in the six states to 158,926 with 77,819 still employed.

SEEK TO SHUT 25

The walkout of five employes of the Lawrence Woolen Company was the wedge being used at Lawrence in an attempt to close 25 mills. A picket line of 27 persons, including five women, went on duty at the plant this morning. The plant is also headquarters of the Lawrence Duck Company.

George H. Cottell, Fall River organizer for the United Textile Workers, was in charge of Lawrence picketing. Also active was Joseph Salerno, prominent in the 1912 strike, now a baker.

It was reported a flying squadron from Lowell would attempt to picket the Pacific Mills, but police wree on guard to prevent picketing there. There is no one on strike there.

GUARDS BALK PICKETS

Fitchburg and Dighton were other danger points in Massachusetts.

At Fitchburg a flying squadron of 400 strikers, mobilized in Worcester County, apepared to picket the Fitchburg Yarn plant. One hundred police were on duty.

The question of attempting to picket the Mt. Hope Finishing Co.'s mills at Dighton, still runnig behind a guard of imported detectives, barricaded by sandbags, will be discussed at a general meeting in Taunton tonight. Joseph Sylvia, general strike organizer, will addres strikers.

Trouble is feared if the meeting reaches a decision to attempt picketing the Mt. Hope plant.

SQUADRON TURNED BACK

Vermont's first clash in the strike was reported this morning when a flying squadron of 250 was turned back at Proctorsville by 150 townsmen armed with axe handles and clubs, led by a state's attorney and a constable.

The squadron had planned to picket the Black Bear mill, employing 150. One visiting striker was arrested. The leader of the squadron warned, as he left, that the picketers would return and close the mill.

State's Attorney A. J. Parker and Constable E. H. Schenfeld led the townsmen, who had been deputized.

At Providence a skeleton regiment of the national guard, totalling 180 soldiers, was quartered in two armories prepared to move to the plant of the Sayles Finishing Company, Saylesville, where three men were wounded yesterday.

TROOPS CALLED OUT

The troops were called out at 8 a. m. by Governor Green after a request was made by Sheriff Jonathan Andrews whose deputies have been at the plant since Thursday.

For hours yesterday and last night, state police batled a mob of more than 1,000 around the plant, repeatedly laying down tear gas barrages. The three men were wounded by shotgun slugs.

BELLBOY'S SUIT TO JURY TODAY

The $2000 damage suit of Aaron Babikian, 48 - year - old bellboy against Lieutenant James Trimble Brown, U. S. A., for alleged breach of an agreement to get him a job at the Ritz Carlton, is expected to reach the jury today.

Babikian, formerly a bellboy at the Hotel Touraine, testified that Lieutenant Brown asked him to leave the Hotel Touraine when Miss Nellie P. Carter, who left an estate of more than $3,000,000, moved from that hotel to the Ritz Carlton.

He declared that Brown told him he would get him a job attending Miss Carter at the hotel, provided he left his position at the Touraine without the customary notice and refrained from discussing his plans with other employes at the Touraine.

Babikan said he gave up his post on August 24 but received employment at the Ritz Carlton for only 10 days as a special messenger without uniform. He then found it impossible to get his job back at the Touraine and was jobless for a lengthy period, he said.

Lieutenant Brown said he enjoined Babikan to secretary to prevent other workers at the Touraine from harrassing Miss Carter, but denied promising to obtain a job for him at the Ritz Carlton.

He admitted having received gifts totaling $8000 from Miss Carter and after October 1, 1933, $1500 a month. Under the will of Miss Carter he was left $100,000.

Ex-Queen 'Sophisticate' and Her Choices

Marlene Dietrich, above, darling of flicker patrons, who is hailed by Miss Wong as typifying the "typical sophisticate outside the studio."

Anna May Wong, screen actress, acclaimed as the "most sophisticated woman on two continents," reveals the title irks her because sophistication generally means "being blase." Others are welcome to the crown as far as she is concerned.

NEW ARREST IN SUIT LOTTERY

Irving Kronberg, 22, of Boston, whose father was sentenced to 18 months imprisonment here last week in connection with a suit lottery was arrested in Portland, Me., today on similar charges.

He will be arraigned today on a charge of operating a lottery, the complaint having been preferred by the Better Business Bureau of the Portland Chamber of Commerce.

He represented the Stetson Tailoring Company, of 655 Boylston street, Boston, according to the complaint and sold men's suits at $36—a dollar a week. Purchasers were given numbers. If these correspond with United States Treasury balance figure at any time during the 36 weeks, they were to make no further payments.

In Portland, the young man would say that he lived in a Boston hotel, but police declared he was the son of Samuel Kronberg, arrested here in connection with the same scheme last week.

Spanish Public Safety Head Slain

San Sebastian, Spain, Sept. 11—Manuel Andreas Casaus, director of public safety and one of the leading figures in political life of the new Republic, was shot and killed here in busy Colon square.

A pistol was found near his hand, giving rise to reports that he shot himself, but several bystanders insisted that one or more assailants fired on him at close range.

Anna M. Wong Shuns Title of 'Most Sophisticated'

By TED SMITS
International News Service Staff Correspondent

Hollywood, Sept. 11 — Being known as the "most sophisticated woman of two continents" gives Anna May Wong a distict pain.

The slender Chinese actress who is the toast of London and just as popular in Hollywood, doesn't like her "title", because she said:

"It really gives me a pain when sophistication is interpreted as being blase. And that's the way people usually regard the word."

So she is quite willing that the honors go elsewhere.

LAUDS ELISSA LANDI

"She is very polished and charming on the screen and certainly the outstanding professional sophisticate," Miss Wong declared.

"Mainly because he is true to himself," was her explanation.

But Miss Wong would like to have it understood that in her mind, to be called a true sophisticate is a compliment—for it shows the ability to meet any situation gracefully.

CHOICES OFF SCREEN

Off the screen, it is a different matter for her to choose sophisticates, she stated.

"Carl Brisson undoubtedly is Hollywood's sophisticate in real life," she commented, declaring that the London and Copenhagen star is 'more at ease and interesting than any man I have met since my return to Hollywood."

"But don't take sophistication too seriously—especially the way people generally look at it.

"BE YOURSELF," SHE SAYS

"Just be yourself. It took Mae West to get that idea over in pictures, but it holds good any time, any place."

After a departure during which time she was a sensation on the London stage, Miss Wong has returned to her old Hollywood studio, Paramount, to make "Limehouse Nights," with George Raft.

But she finds that her reputation has preceded her home to her annoyance. Not that it's a bad reputation, but it can be annoying.

Boy, 16, Lands 33-Lb. Salmon

Fredericton, N. B., Sept. 11—To Charles D. L. Harrison, 16-year-old boy from Green's Farms, Conn., go honors for catching the largest salmon reported to the New Brunswick Guides Association so far this season.

The fish, 43 inches long, 25 inches in girth and 33 pounds and seven ounces in weight, was taken in Clearwater brook, a tributary of the southwest Miramichi river and required two hours and 20 minutes to land.

Particulars have been forwarded to the association, to compete for the silver salmon angling tropny offered annually.

MILLEN CASES JAM DOCKET

Faced with the heaviest trial list in its history, because of the long delay in cases caused by the Millen-Faber, Norma Millen trials, Norfolk superior court at Dedham is to have two judges for the first time in years.

Judge Nelson P. Brown is sitting in the first session of the court, while Judge Albert F. Hayden will preside over the second.

POLICE BATTLE 1000 RIOTERS AT SILK MILL

By Associated Press

Lancaster, Pa., Sept. 11—A crowd of more than 1000 textile strike sympathizers and pickets stormed the Stehli Silk Mill, one of the largest in the country, today, injuring half a dozen workers and overturning automobiles.

The rioters were dispersed by city and state police.

Troops Called in Five States to Guard Mills

By Associated Press

Washington, Sept. 11—Additional troops were called today in textile centers to prevent violence as the presidential mediation board discussed the textile strike with manufacturers.

National guards were ordered on duty in Maine, Connecticut and Rhode Island, while troops continued to patrol mill centers in North and South Carolina where some mills reopened yesterday.

Although the mediation board asserted it believed the dispute was "not incapable of solution" and that a "settlement can be reached which will be fair to workers, employers and the public," difficulty in reaching a solution was indicated in the diverse views on how arbitration should be carried out.

George A. Sloan, president of the Cotton Textile Institute, insisted negotiations must be between owners and workers.

EACH INDUSTRY SEPARATE

Francis J. Gorman, national strike leader, said settlement must be with the "textile industries as such." He declared:

"That means there must be settlement with the entire cotton textile industry, with the entire wool and worsted industry, with the entire silk industry and so on. There will be no settlement mill by mill in any of the divisions of the industry."

Nevertheless, the decision of Sloan to call manufacturers to meet with the mediation board was regarded as a hopeful note. Names of those who will join in the conference today was not made public, but it was understood they will include 10 or 12 prominent manufacturers of the North and South. Among them will be Ernest M. Hood, president of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers, comprising the Northern mills, and W. D. Anderson, president of the American Cotton Manufacturers Association, the Southern mills.

LABOR EXTENDS TIME

Labor's offer to let the mediation board, headed by Governor John G. Winant of New Hampshire, arbitrate the dispute was continued until 6 p. m. (E. S. T.) today—until after the meeting with the manufacturers.

Under the proposal, both sides would accept the decision of the board and all mills would be classed during negotations.

Approximately 60 mills reopened in the Carolinas yesterday, but the 5,000 who returned to work were offset by new walkouts in New England.

Troops Guard Towel Plant From Strikers

By Associated Press

Kannapolis, N. C., Sept. 11—Two companies of National Guardsmen and 175 special officers were mobolized about the Cannon Mills, largest towel factory in the world, early today as flying squadrons of strikers from several other towns were reported converging in an attempt to force a close-down.

Approximately 80 cars from the vicinity of Gastonia, passed through Charlotte about 6 a. m., bearing placards "on to Kannapolis," and shouting defiance of Charles A. Cannon, mill president, and the National Guard.

ERA Concert Tonight

Lowell, Sept. 11—An ERA concert will be held this evening at Varnum Park, Bridge and First streets, at 7 o'clock. Director John P. Broderick will lead the Lowell ERA orchestra.

Bridge Game Brought Love

Mrs. John L. Perry, above, the former Esther Ann McClellan, of Roxbury, was today revealed as the bride since New Year's Day of John L. Perry, last year graduate of Northeastern University. The couple met at a bridge game and made such excellent partners that they decided on matrimony. (Picture by Boston Evening American Staff Photographer.)

SECRET BRIDAL AFTER BRIDGE PARTY BARED

They never trumped each other's ace, nor did they approach bids wrongly, and so they were married—but they kept it a secret since last New Year's Day.

Today the secret came out that Miss Esther Ann McLellan, 21, of 25 Ellingwood street, Roxbury, and John L. Perry, 22, member of last year's graduating class at Northeastern University, had eloped to New Hampshire and agreed to be marital, as well as bridge partners.

Perry is the son of Henry C. Perry of Ocean street, Atlantic, and grandson of the contractor who built the Blue Hills Observatory years ago. His bride is a graduate of Jamaica Plain high school and for several years has been an active member of the Boston Swimming Club.

"We met at a bridge game," the bride said today, "and made such good partners that we decided to become engaged. That was three years ago. It seemed a good idea to begin the New Year by making that partnership permanent, so we went to New Hampshire and Dr. Howard T. Joslyn, an old friend of John's, married us."

Jeffersons Postpone Bridge

Owing to the death of Patrick J. Colbert, a charter member of the Jefferson Club of Somerville, the whist and bridge party of that organization at the Western Junior High School has been postponed until a later date.

U. S. AIDS OWNERS OF HOMES TO MAKE MANY REPAIRS

By PEGGY DOYLE

This is the first of a series of articles explaining the new National Housing Act which, under facilities being developed by the Federal Housing Administration, enables home-owners in Boston and other communities to obtain inexpensive, easy-to-repay loans for repairing or improving their homes.

Does your house need a new roof?

Is the outside of it in need of paint, stucco, tuck-pointing or veneering?

Is a new heating plant required?

Are the gutters rusty?

Would you like to modernize the bathroom?

Are additional rooms a necessity?

LET UNCLE SAM ACT

Do you desire to convert your basement into recreational or rentable areas?

If you have business property, is it safe for tenants, customers or employes? Have you checked up on the exterior steps, damaged sidewalks, walls, fences and jagged curbs?

Do you want to build a house?

Well, owners of homes and business property, let Uncle Sam do it.

If you can give assurance that you own the property that you have an income at least five times the annual payments on the note; that your mortgage, if any, is in good standing, and there are no other past due encumberances or liens against your property, and that you will use the money solely for property improvement, there is absolutely NOTHING to stop you from making any one or more of these housing improvements or repairs.

Roughly, it is estimated that there are 12 million houses in this country in need of repairs. In these United States, there are at least two million men who would like to build homes for their families.

PLAN TO MAKE JOBS

Now, on the other hand, there are four million men in the building trades and materials industry who are out of work and would like to repair those 12 million homes and build those four million others.

And SO your canny Uncle, under the guise of Congress and the President, has enforced the National Housing Act and created a Federal Housing Administration for the sole purpose of getting these two groups together in the interests of happiness and prosperity.

In the past four or five years of depression, your property has undoubtedly deteriorated from lack of normal care and attention. Your lessened income has not permitted your making the necessary improvements and repairs.

The shrinkage in values of real estate and other collateral has made it impossible for you to obtain credit, which normally would have been available and which would have been repaid out of your regular income.

U. S. ASSUMES RISK

But now there is an end to the fear that has possessed both you and the bankers—and has halted business activity.

Uncle Sam is prepared to assume the risk involved in real estate through his Federal Housing Administration.

Funds of the FHA, under the terms of the National Housing Act, will come from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, unless the President desires otherwise by making available any part of the moneys at his disposal for "emergency purposes."

To obtain funds to give to the FHA, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is empowered to issue bonds, debentures, etcetera, to the amount necessary to cover the money needed for the housing scheme.

Under the plan, if a person wants to improve property, he borrows from a financial institution co-operating with the FHA. The government underwrites the loan to 20 per cent of its value. The promissory notes given for these loans must be signed by the owner of the improved real estate and must be not less than $100 or not more than $2000 for any one property.

For financing the "mutual mortgage" plan, ten million dollars is made available.

(Tomorrow's article will go into detail as to who may apply, to whom, for how much, in the matter of the government's great Modernization Credit Plan.)

Films to Explain National Home Act

An explanation of the entire National Housing Act, with the aid of government talking pictures, will be given at 8:15 tonight at Hotel Brunswick by Charles A. Birmingham, New England regional director of the National Housing Administration.

Although the lecture will be delivered before a special meeting of the members of the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange, Rodney W. Long, president of the exchange, said today anyone wishing to enlarge his knowledge of the workings of the act may attend.

BRIDE SURVIVOR DUE HOME SOON

As soon as Mrs. Frank Loveland, Jr., recovers from the exhaustion that followed her rescue from the Morro Castle, she will return to her home in Gloucester, with her husband, it was reported today.

Formerly Nathene Turk, she was on her honeymoon, and, strangely enough, her marriage license, abandoned in the rush for life was recovered from the flame-ravaged hulk of the Morro Castle yesterday.

Both Mrs. Harry Turk, the girl's mother, and Mrs. Frank Loveland, Sr., her mother-in-law, got word from New York that the honeymooners would be home either tomorrow or Thursday.

WIDOW RIVAL, WIFE CLAIMS

Testimony that her husband had become interested in an attractive Lynn widow, even while the funeral of the woman's husband was being held, was given by Mrs. Anna R. Moleti, 45, of Castle road, Nahant, in the divorce suit in Salem probate court, started by her husband, Charles E. Moleti, of Lynn.

Mrs. Moleti charged that her husband turned his attentions to Mrs. Rose C. Peluso, 36-year-old Lynn widow, and told of a midnight visit to the widow's home a month after the funeral, when she said she surprised her husband and Mrs. Peluso.

BURNS TO ACT IN BEACON CASE

A plea to recommit the case of minority stockholders of the Beacon Participations, Incorporated, an affiliate of the defunct Beacon Trust Company, against the former directors, was under consideration by Judge John J. Burns, of the Suffolk Superior Court, today.

Following urgings of Lowell A. Maperry, counsel for the defendants, that the case be recommitted to the master for further findings, Judge Burns ordered that all exhibits be given to him and then reserved decision whether he would accept the plea or order a final decree.

The former directors were recently assessed $1,419,807 by James B. Reilly, named master to fix the exact amount of the damages after Judge Burns had previously found the defendants liable for losses of stockholders because of negligence.

William G. Thompson, counsel for one of the minority stockholders, argued that the case should not be recommitted since the liability of the former directors was established when they ordered the treasurer of the Beacon Participations, Incorporated to buy a $250,000 note from the Beacon Trust Company.

ROOSEVELT TO SEE ELY, BUT KEEP MUM

By BERNARD J. DOHERTY

Although a veil of mystery has been set up around the suddenly announced visit of Governor Ely today to President Roosevelt at Hyde Park, intimates of the governor understood the Cole-Curley battle for the governorship nomination would not take an important part in the conference.

The President, it was pointed out, of course is interested in the Massachusetts situation, but political leaders here do not look for any change in the studied policy of the President not to interfere in local Democratic contests.

Tonight General Cole will address rallies in Salem and Lynn. Senator Walsh will also speak at these gatherings.

City Councillor John F. Dowd, former critic of Curley and now one of his supporters, speaking in Cambridge, lauded the former mayor as "a self made man."

LIGHT RULING SCORED

Dowd criticised Governor Ely for his passiveness in the face of the recent decision of the public utilities commission, which reduced the lighting rate ½ cent a kilowatt hour, but allowed the Edison company to charge for bulbs. He declared:

"If Curley were governor, these public utilities now robbing the public, would not be permitted to get away with it."

In a Springfield speech, Governor Ely scored the political aspirations of Curley. He said:

"Because he wasn't nominated at Worcester, Curley says the convention was bossed. I am a boss to hear Mr. Curley tell it, but I am a boss interested in the preservation of the Democratic party and not in wrecking it to further my own ambitions.

"If we may take Mr. Curley's own words of two years ago, when he declared there were 49 men in the state more fitted for Governor than Joseph B. Ely, naming Sherman L. Whipple first and General Cole second, then General Cole is the greatest Democrat in the state today."

BACON SCORES SPENDING

Opening his campaign against Frank A. Goodwin, Lieutenant-Governor Gaspar G. Bacon, convention endorsed candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor, declared in a statement that the first great need of the hour is a "return to sane spending in government."

He charged that it is ridiculous to suggest that work and wages can be provided by the simple expedient of continued borrowing. He said:

"A return to sane spending and balanced budgets in government will remove much of the present day uncertainty in business and industry. This in turn will permit and stimulate expansion of business and industry. Expansion means more employment. More employment means lowered relief costs. Lower relief costs means lower taxes."

B. C. High School Registers 1000

More than 1000 students are expected to register at Boston College High school before the close of the day. Opening exercises today were featured by an address to the students by the Rev. James L. McGovern, S.J., the principal.

Changes in the faculty include the appointment of the Rev. James D. McLaughlin, S.J., as student counsellor, and the Rev. Arthur J. Campbell, S.J. and the Rev. John F. Craig, S.J., as instructors in classics.

Blumenthal and Peggy May Reunite

Hollywood, Sept. 11 (INS)—A. C. Blumenthal, wealthy New York broker, remained noncommittal today concerning a possibile reconciliation, with his actress wife, Peggy Fears. Blumenthal arrived by airplane and communicated immediately with his wife. They dined together and went on an automobile ride to Malibu Beach.

Western Girl, Deaf, Dumb, Blind, Comes to Study

Taxi-horns bleated and police whistles screeched, but she failed to hear.

Little Helen Seifert, for 6 years, has been deaf, dumb and blind.

Through public subscription, a year's study at Perkins Institution for the Blind in Watertown was made possible for the girl. Her father is a Nebraska beet farmer.

With Helen on her trip here came Miss Margaret Hoshor, 24, of Omaha, who will be instructed at the Perkins institute on the methods of teaching those triply shut off from the world.

As a condition of the scholarship, Miss Hoshor must spend the next eight years of her life teaching Helen, and must establish a school for the deaf-dumb-and-blind when she returns to Nebraska with the child next year.

For the next few months, a large mechanical doll will be the principal teaching instrument. With the child's hand placed over her mouth, Miss Hoshor will say "doll," with careful articulation.

Dr. Gabriel Farrel, director of the Perkins Institute, said that Helen was undoubtedly one of the brightest cases since the famous Helen Kellar.

EUROPEAN CONFLICT MADE ZAHAROFF WORLD'S RICHEST MAN

This is the fourth of a series of articles revealing the picturesque background of Sir Basil Zaharoff, exposed in the Washington munitions investigation as Czar of the world's "merchants of death."

By ERNEST HOPKINS

Copyright, 1934, by Universal Service, Inc.

Although Sir Basil Zaharoff had more to do with Europe's "Race of Armaments" than any other one man, the outbreak of the World War found him as relatively unknown in Europe as he is in the United States today.

His business as master-salesman for the Vickers armaments firm had rolled up cumulatively, like a snowball. Yet in all the voluminous literature about the causes and roots of the World War, you will find hardly a mention of his name.

He lived in Paris and was visited by ministers up state, nobility, bankers, secret agents. His receiving the French Legion of Honor in 1908 hardly made a ripple.

In organizing the Whitehead Torpedo concern in 1912, his partners included the Rothchilds, Bismarck's niece, French and English capitalists he now controlled Vickers, in which stock was also held by Balfour, Curzon, Grey, and half the nobility and power of England, from members of the Royal Family to Dean Inge of St. Paul's. To list his financial connections in England, France, Russia, Austria and Germany itself would require more space than this article.

And—one day in 1914 Albert Vickers, Zaharoff's mouthpiece, informed his stockholders that "an era of prosperity is about to begin, thanks to the rapid and continuous growth of our business." A few days later came Sarajevo.

And he became the Allies' secret agent to bring Greece into the war. This huge conspiracy is now fully unearthed.

Few historic achievements were ever so single handedly done by one man—and Zaharoff, billionaire Greek, was that man.

Another article in this series will be published in tomorrow's Boston Evening American.

MORRO ENGINEER TELLS OF QUITTING VESSEL

more efforts were not made to get more passengers into that lifeboat.

"Well," said the chief engineer with a tinge of insistence in his voice, "we simply couldn't get through that fire to reach them."

The chief engineer was asked if it was a bad fire and he replied:

"It was a terrible fire—the worst I've ever seen."

While Abbott was testifying at the department of commerce inquiry, three bridge officers and a wiper appeared at the federal building in answer to grand jury subpoenas in U. S. Attorney Martin Conboy's investigation of the disaster.

They were Chief Officer William F. Warms, Acting First Officer, Clarence C. Hackney, Acting Second Officer Ivan Freeman and Ellis Beaumont, a wiper. They were accompanied by a group of attorneys.

They were questioned behind closed doors by Chief Assistant U. S. Attorney Louis M. Treadwell; Francis P. F. Adams, chief of the criminal division; Assistant U. S. Attorney Joseph Prendergast and Edwrd P. F. Egan, Assistant U. S. Attorney.

Abbott began his testimony in a clear, resonant voice.

Questioned by J. L. Smith, boiler inspector, a member of the board of inquiry, Abbott said his home was in New Rochelle, N. Y., and he briefly outlined his experience as a mariner.

Reports Boilers In Perfect Condition

He estimated the fire broke out "about 3 a. m." Smith asked him if he was in the engine room when the order was received to slow the engines down.

"No," Said Abbott, "I was asleep."

He explained everything seemed to be in good shape when he retired. Five boilers had been working the night before. The Morro Castle was ahead of time and they had cut out one of the boilers.

Abbott was asked how the boilers were working.

"Perfectly," he declared, without a second's hesitation.

As far as he knew the engines were working full speed up to the time the order was sent down to reduce the revolutions.

Q—Who gave that order?

A—I suppose it came from the bridge.

Q—No one called you?

A—No, sir, I was awakened by the fire alarm.

Asked if he went to the engine room as soon as he heard the fire alarm, Abbott replied:

"I started out. I telephoned to the first assistant engineer. He told me everything was all right."

Found Fire Hose Lines Working

Abbott said he went to "A" deck.

"The fire was crackling and smoke was pouring out. I saw the hoses were working. Going down through the passage I closed the doors leading into the cabins to keep the smoke from blowing in.

"I helped five or six passengers to a spot on the aft part of the ship."

Abbott related how he "worked down to D deck and called to the first assistant engineer." He said he then fought his way up to the bridge and reported to the captain.

Q—'Vas the emergency set (fire fighting equipment) working?

A—No. The circuit was burned out. It was the only time I knew it to fail.

Q—Three watches of men were off duty. What were they doing?

A—They weren't called until the fire alarm went.

Q—Wasn't that strange? Shouldn't they have been called sooner?

A—I assumed the alarm was sounded as soon as the fire was discovered.

Under further questioning Abbott gave a connected picture of his actions. He said he met the third asisstant engineer on D deck. And asked 'how are things.' 'Pretty bad' he said, acording to Abbott.

Q—Did you see the fire in the social hall?

A—Yes, sir, from the outside it was all flame.

Q—Did you go in?

Q—In your mind, if they had put a hose with pressure of 100 pounds a square inch on the social hall, don't you think they could have knocked down that fire?

Bulkheads Open To Let Men Out

A—No, sir, we were afraid the men below would never be able to get out. My crew and my engineers were good, I know they were true.

Q—Did you leave the fire pump running?

A—Yes sir, we did. It was running all the time.

Q—What were your orders from the bridge?

A—One engine astern and one ahead to work the ship around.

Q—Was the telephone communication to the bridge working?

A—Yes sir. It was intact.

Q—How about the engine room telegraph?

A—It burned out.

Q—Was there any friction between the engine room and the bridge? A.—No, sir.

Hoover turned the questioning back to the time of the fire.

Q—When did you wake?

A—About 3 o'clock.

Q—Did you at any time go to the engine room?

A—No, sir, I did not.

Q—When did the pumps fail?

A—They did not fail.

Q—In what way did you come off the ship?

A—I reported to the bridge and the captain told me to take No. 1 lifeboat. I got it off.

Q—Do you know if you were first off?

A—I think No. 3 and 5 were away.

Q—Was the fire burning then?

Took 2 Passengers Only In Boat

A—It was raging and all the lights were off.

Q—When you got into the boat was there any water being played on the fire?

A—Some I think, but not very much.

Q—Who was in that boat beside yourself?

A—Thirty-two altogether.

Q—Any passengers?

A—Two, sir.

Q—All the rest were of the crew then?

A—Yes, sir. One was Dr. Cochrane and a lady passenger.

Q—What I want to know (from Hoover) why No. 1 boat did not take off more passengers?

A—When I left A deck there were no passengers on deck. Anyone down below must have burned up. We saw no passengers.

Q—How long did all this take after you awoke at 3 o'clock?

Q—Not seeing any passengers, you didn't make any attempt to find passengers?

A—I don't know about that—I was ordered to take the boat off.

Q—Have you ever had any difficulty with your crew?

A—Never, sir.

Q—What theory have you as to how the fire started?

A—It was such a big fire I couldn't be sure.

Cites Cause of Fire In August on Morro

Abbott was asked if he knew anything about the fire that had occurred on the Morro Castle on August 27 when the liner was en-route from New York to Havana.

"Yes," replied the witness. "Captain Willmott said somebody must have thrown a lighted cigar on the deck and the sparks flew back. One of the night watchmen smelled smoke and the blaze was put out."

Asked of what material the external superstructure of the ship was made he replied: "All steel."

Q—Were the doorways in these bulkheads shut?

A—Not between the library and the lounge. You couldn't have got to it because of the flames. I don't know about the other doors.

Q—What was the material in the cabin walls between the two main steel fire-resisting bulkheads?

A—Wood and beaverwood and possibly some other light composition, I believe.

Abbott said there was no kerosene on board, because the company did not permi its use on the ship.

Abbott stated there was no fire below C deck. It was A deck and B deck, he said, and never got below while he was aboard. This would limit it to the superstructure.

Third Engineer Takes Stand

Arthur Stamper, 28, third assistant engineer, on watch at the time of the fire, was called.

"The first thing I knew that there was fire aboard was when the telephone rang and someone told me,' said Stamper.

"The fire alarm rang about that time. It was about three o'clock.

"Then smoke began to come down into the engine room."

Stamper said he stopped the force drought ventilation system for a few minutes, but the smoke seemed to "get worse" and he started the motor again.

Q—What time did you decide to leave the engine room?

A—Soon after the lights went out. The smoke got so dense.

Q—Did you have ample time to shut the stops on the main boilers?

Stamper related how he escaped from the burning ship by jumping overboard after daylight.

He said he heard passengers screaming on the decks as attempts were being made to reach the lifeboats.

"Many were panicky," he added.

The hearing recessed for lunch in the midst of Stamper's story.

A huge throng of spectators crowded into the courtroom long before the hearing began. They blocked the aisles and made the place uncomfortable.

Photographers occupying all the seats in the jury box had a field day.

As the inquiry board mounted a dais and took their seats directly opposite the first witness a court attendant arose and commanded all standees to leave the courtroom. They did—reluctantly.

Radio microphones were set up on a table at which the witness sat. Two women court stenographers took notes at this table.

couldn't be sure. Some said something about a ball of fire, but I couldn't be sure.

MANHOLE SAVES AUTO VICTIM

Knocked into a manhole at the intersection of Sudbury and Friend streets, by an automobile operated by Lester C. Blood, of George street, Medford, Edward J. Richard, of 58 Brookside avenue, Jamaica Plain, suffered only minor cuts and bruises today, according to police.

Richard, employed in the police signal service department, was passing cables through the manhole to his co-worker, William O'Brien, of Velmell road, Hyde Park, when the auto struck him.

BLAST ON LINER FEARED; FIRE IS SPREADING

By Associated Press

Asbury Park, N. J., Sept. 11—The blazing, fire-scarred hulk of the Morro Castle was still considered today a thing of menace, not to be invaded with impunity.

Threat of further explosions in the wrecked liner, which rests on the sand a short distance off shore, caused officials to rescind orders to put city firemen aboard.

As a precautionary measure, the beach near the vessel was cleared of all persons for a distance of several hundred feet. The boardwalk was also closed to spectators.

Fire raged in the forepeak and forward holds of the Morro Castle, eating its way nearer the keel.

Captain William A. Hall, representative of the Ward line, which operated the liner, and Acting Fire Chief William S. Taggert feared the flames might reach the ship's fuel tanks which are full.

There were two blasts on the wrecked boat yesterday. Firemen were fearful lest another explosion rip out some of the weakened plates and hurl them on shore.

As spectators withdrew from the danger zone, the bow of the Morro Castle was smoking heavily.

BOY ON SHIP TO BE "A MAN"

His desire to go to sea and "be a man" nearly brought 18-year-old William Tripp of Sayward street, Dorchester, to death in the flaming Morro Castle, it was revealed today.

The youth's mother, Mrs. Jeanne Tripp, was back from New York, where Tripp will testify at the government hearings on the disaster and then return to his studies at Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Mrs. Tripp told first of the dramatic restoration of her son to her arms, then of the motive that caused him to become an apprentice engineer aboard the stricken ship. She told reporters:

"He rushed through the crowd to me. 'Mother' was all that he said. Little did I notice the mud-caked sneakers he was wearing nor the girme about his hands and face as he swept me in his arms.

"I could scarcely stand there as I realized that the scorched figure was my son."

" 'Well, mother,' he said. 'I wanted to go to sea to see life and be a man in the sight of the world. I guess that my wish came true, but in far too tragic a manner'."

Ferguson Quits as Texas Party Chief

Galveston, Texas, Sept. 11—Former Governor James E. Ferguson has resigned as national Democratic committeeman from Texas. The State Democratic Executive Committee has adopted a motion notifying Vice-President John N. Garner of his election to the committeemanship.

Ferguson said he resigned in the interests of party harmony, and made is resignation contingent upon the acceptance of the post by Vice-President Garner.

Two thousand and ninety-three million dollars.

Why insist on issuing fiat bonds when you can just as well issue fiat money? You might say "people that have bonds are entitled to new bonds." Why so tender about bond owners? Government takes every other kind of property that it needs. Bondholders should not complain if the government handed them 100 per cent of green fiat dollars instead of yellow fiat bonds, no better than the greenbacks.

Getting plain money, not bearing interest, they might spend or invest it, which would be good for the country.

The British Association for the Advancement of Science at Aberdeen hear from Professor A. Szent-Gyorgyi, of the University of Szeged, Hungary, views highly important to every human being.

He has discovered that several of the most serious diseases can be cured by injecting vitamin C into the blood.

He has shown that three injections of the vitamin C will cure Pyorrhea which, according to distinguished advertisers, would be good news for "four out of five" although this is hardly a time for science to kill valuable advertising. Professor Szent-Gyorgi, who succeeded in identifying and isolating the C vitamin, otherwise "ascorbic acid," is the greatest living authority in his field.

The blood stream, which is the stream of life, is a river of living organisms, number billions of living individuals, including dangerous enemies.

Red cells that feed the body, white cells that protect it from its enemies are attacked in the veins and arteries by innumerable disease germs, including the streptococci, one of them like the streptococcus mucosus, protected from attack by a mucous coat of armor.

The Hungarian scientist enumerates many diseases born of blood infection that the C vitamin destroys utterly.

Among others he mentions haemophilia, a disease hereditary in the former royal families of Spain and Russia, causing bleeding that cannot be checked.

No announcement more important could be more than that of the learned Hungarian, whose statements were heard with deepest respect by the world's leading scientists.

"Ascorbic," or anti-scorbutic acid, without which, supplied in fruits and vegetables, sailors died of scurvy, is apparently the same as vitamin C.

Having convinced himself that lack of activity in the adrenal glands caused Addison's disease, which makes the human skin turn brown and blotchy, he made innumerable experiments, which included testing tons of adrenal glands of oxen in the Chicago stockyards. He was generously assisted, financially, by the Josiah Macy Foundation, an American philanthropy.

After working for a year in the United States, in securing only 24 grammes of the precious "ascorbic" substance, he returned to Hungary, and there in his native Hungarian paprika he found all the ascorbic acid he wanted.

Perhaps Hungarians have been saving themselves from many illnesses by using paprika so freely.

SECRET AGENT X-9 AWARD ON AIR TONIGHT

Girls and boys who follow the spirited "Secret Agent X-9" broadcast, as aired each Tuesday evening, will wish to hear about the Alaskan Eskimo pup winning (WAAB), which will be a highlight when "The Chief" holds forth tonight, come 6:30 p. m.

More than a few thousand members of the Boston American X-9 Club are enthused no little over the awarding of this roly poly little dog. Letters have been pouring in for the last four weeks, suggesting a name for him and giving reasons why the writers should have him for their very own. Well, the judges are deciding upon the lucky girl or boy today and the announcement is to be made by radio. Also as a special entertainment attraction, the guest artist is little "Chickie" James, talented Dorchester songstress and dancer. Miss James has long been a juvenile favorite on Boston radio studio stages.

HAIL THE HIKERS!

Another surprise is the plan of the Jamaica Plain X-9 Walking Club, comprising 25 wearers of the badge, who have in mind to visit and pay their respects to the Chief and likewise witness the broadcast. These lads are under the the leadership of "Scotty" Monroe, ardent admirer of the Chief and long an active X-9 worker where he lives.

Joe and Bateese, those French Canadian funmakers, not heard hereabouts for some time, again indulged themselves a WBZ-WBZA turn tonight between 7:15 and 7:30 p. m. Footlight engagements all over New England have kept the two cronies on the move, therefore away from much "mike" activity. However, a regular schedule of their dialect doings is taking shape at the WBZ-WBZA works.

SONG SALESMAN

Over where WNAC waves roll in, the voice of "Whispering Jack" Smith is slated. He launches his new 7:30 to 7:45 series tonight. Jack is ready and waiting to waft "With My Eyes Wide Open" for an ear opener. Meaning at the outset.

That weekly "Crime Clue" half hour (WBZ), due at 8 tonight, offers up "Plain Clothes Girl" for a unique plot title. Said dramatic dial setting is said by the program planners to feature a "smashing climax" so the temptation to listen takes root.

SELECT SOLOING

Frank Munn, romantic tenor of the CBS camp, has an old favorite out of the song files to turn in a "Lavender and Old Lace" program highlight (WNAC) on the stroke of 8 o'clock tonight. It's that "Just a Memory" ballad. Muriel Wilson co-stars with Munn in the rendition of "They Didn't Believe Me" for another bright bit.

Jack (Baron Munchausen) Pearl backs away in favor of Mary Pickford and her new stock company (WEEI) as of October 3. Mary is assuming the lead in a striking series of dramatic presentations. These are to be based on the principal screen productions of the past decade. One wonders why Mary hasn't been negotiated for regular broadcasting before this. Her name should certainly entice earcuppers by the thousands. No doubt her performing will subsequently hold a loyal loudspeaker patronage, providing the sponsors make certain to shape their selling talk carefully.

Joe:—It will be a wise move to trade in your old car for one of those real bargains that are advertised daily in the Classified columns of the American and Advertiser.

2 QUINCY BOYS, DOG BITTEN BY RABID PET

Bitten by a dog in Quincy last night, two boys and a dog were under treatment for rabies today. The dog, a mongrel, said by police to be owned by Nicholas Foranaro of Hodges avenue, Quincy, first bit Foranaro's son, Leonard, 3, and then William Kane, 11, of 39 Hollis avenue, also of Quincy, and his dog.

Cornered on the second floor porch of Foranaro's home, the dog was lassoed by Motorcycle Patrolman James A. D. MacKay, who is also the dog catcher. MacKay held the dog until a veterinary, E. A. deVannes, arrived.

DeVannes said that the dog exhibited every symptom of rabies, and had probably been bitten by one of two dogs caught in Quincy last month. The dog was killed and the head sent for minute examination to the Wasserman Laboratory in Quincy.

The Foranaro boy and Kane have undergone the Pasteur treatment.

BRIDE OF ASTOR IN BRIDESMAID ROLE

By CHOLLY KNICKERBOCKER
Universal Service Society Editor

New York, Sept. 11—Mrs. John Jacob Astor III—there's no use denying the glamour attached to the Astor name—will act as a bridesmaid a week from tomorrow. She is a bride of only a short while herself—and as Ellen Tuck French her wedding to Astor at Newport was the biggest news of that day.

Young Mrs. Astor has consented to serve as a bridesmaid for Joan Blake, who is to be married to Herman Harjes in the Church of the Heavenly Rest, on upper Fifth Avenue.

I am willing to wager my best walking stick that "Tucky" French Astor will be included in more wedding parties in the next few months than any bride of recent years—now that she has consented to serve Miss Blake.

Young Harjes, accompanied by her mother, the magnificent Fredericka Berwind of Philadelphia, arrived from Paris yesterday. No sooner had he walked down the gangplank and joined his bride-to-be than the plans for the wedding on the 19th were completed.

Joan's father, the venerable Dr. Joseph A. Blake, is giving her the wedding and her half-brother and half-sister, "Willy" Mackay, and Ellin Mackay Berlin are giving the wedding reception.

Bride in Bridesmaid's Role

Mrs. John Jacob Astor, 3d, the former Ellen Tuck French, a bride of only a few months, is to fill the role of a bridesmaid at New York next week. THRIFT LAUDED BY GUTTERSON

Depression struck New England with less force than any other part of the country, in the opinion of Alburn M. Gutterson, New York hotel manager.

After talking to thousands of travelers, Gutterson attributes the New Englanders' resistance to demoralization to "self reliance, foresight and resourcefulness." He said:

"In his youth, the New Englander is taught to make the best of his lot. If he didn't have the kind of plaything he wanted, he made it, or went without. As he grew older and got a job, he worked hard, saved, and made the best of his lot. If his factory moved away he took up another trade in many instances.

Gutterson knows New Englanders well. He is a native of New Hampshire.

Blonde Spy for British 'Enemy'

By International News Service

London, Sept. 11—Great Britain was successfully and easily "invaded" today by land, sea and air forces, co-operating for the first time in a theoretical test of British defenses.

A woman spy—a platinum blonde—played a prominent part in the invasion. Last night she appeared in the district to be attacked, and wheedled valuable information from officers and men defending signal posts.

Two thousand troops landed on the Yorkshire coast, and, aided by the sea and air forces, quickly seized the entire coast line.

GERMANY CUTS ALL IMPORTS

Berlin, Sept. 11 (AP)—All importations into Germany were declared subject to control today when Dr. Fritz Sarnow, representing Hjalmar Schacht, economy dictator, outlined "Schacht's new plan" to save the government's depleted currency reserves through restriction of imports.

The nation's ten import control departments will be increased to 25, thus putting the whole import system, including farm products, into the government's hands.

The value of materials that may be imported without a permit was radically reduced from 50 marks ($20) to 10 marks ($4).

The newly-created control departments, instead of the Reichsbank, are authorized to issue permits beginning September 24.

MAD MILLIONS

By Charles Grant

CHAPTER XXX

Homer sank onto the chesterfield and read the letter again. Then he began to laugh.

He stopped laughing as suddenly as he had begun. A mood of gray lucidity followed his self-protective hysteria.

Not that Marion could possibly know about the evening he spent with Dot Whiting . . .

HE RECALLS DOT

All right, he knew where to find some one who would do these things—make him feel he was a person of importance. He thought of the evening he had spent with Dot Whiting as the only pleasant interlude in his months of harassment. He took a couple of stiff drinks, called her, and found her sweetly agreeable.

Alspaugh was a great man to Dot Whiting, or at least she made him feel that he was. He had plenty of ready cash, which he spent recklessly that night, when he would better have saved it. They got happily tight in a round of speakeasies and night clubs and from the last of these they went to an obscure uptown hotel.

"Nobody loves me!" Homer hiccuped after he had held her in his arms and received her caresses.

"Sa lie! I love you!" she cried, kissing him again.

"Yes, you love me . . . You're worth the whole damn lot of 'em You're a sweet kid. You won't leave me will you? Promise me you'll never leave me!"

Just as Dorothy was promising eternal fidelity, there was a knock at the door.

"Wha's that?" he asked.

"Bell boy with the ginger ale, I guess," she said.

Dishevelled, stumbling a little half undressed, Alspaugh opened the door a crack. Immediately it was pushed fully open by the thrusting shoulders of two strange men.

But Homer hardly noticed the men. He stood aghast and cowering before the startling apparition of Marian, her eyes hot and unforceable and glowing with contemptuous triumph.

BASE FOR DIVORCE

"I knew it! I knew you'd go straight to this creature of yours," she said as she bent the cold cruel stare of unassailable virtue on Dot Whiting. "Of all the disgusting sights! You'll hear from my lawyer, Homer Alspaugh! I've got all the evidence now I need for my divorce."

A little before 5 o'clock on the day of Alspaugh's departure, Cathleen came in to Jasper Ingram's office bringing the last batch of the day's mail.

"I don't know if there's anything here you'll want to take care of tonight, Mr. Ingram," she said. "I suppose Mr. Alspaugh would have known, but I'm afraid I'll have to ask you to look through it yourself. And here's one letter addressed to Mrs. Ingram."

Jasper shuffled the letters hastily, and dropped them on his desk. The one addressed to his wife, however, he scrutinized briefly. The envelope bore the name of the bank headed by Patrick Higgins, and the address was typewritten: "Mrs. Laura Seward Ingram, in care of J. H. Ingram, The Ingram Building." He wondered idly what the letter was about. Perhaps a solicitation for her account.

Then, to add to the annoyances of an aggravating day, a smallish excited man stopped him as he left.

"I get no satisfaction from your lawyers, Mr. Ingram. I have visited your lawyers and I can not make them see the seriousness of this case. So I come to headquarters, Mr. Ingram. Now I ask you if you wouldn't rather make us a fair settlement than see us go ahead with our suit! Believe me, if we sue, we'll ask for plenty and we'll get it!"

"I don't know what you're talking about," Ingram said. "Kindly get out of my way."

"Didn't you promise to put my client, Miss Arline Martin, on the stage—star her in a big Broadway production, and didn't you take advantage of her under those pretences—"

"My attorneys talk to people like you," he said. "Go to them. If you molest me again, I'll have you arrested."

Joe McCarthy rang the bell at the Ingram town house in 69th st. He was admitted and shown into a small drawing-room by a butler whose appearance and manner made Joe throw out his chest truculently to avoid cringing.

BLACKMAIL VISIT

"Good evening, Mr. McCarthy! You're Cathleen's brother, aren't you? How is she? Let's sit down over here by the fire. Smoke?"

Joe hadn't the presence of mind to avoid shaking hands with Seward, but he refused the offered cigarette.

"Don't you be making so free with my sister's name!" he admonished roughly.

Seward stared. "Why, she said I could call her Cathleen. She and I are friends! That is, she's mad with me now, but I am certainly her friend still. When they told me you were here I hoped you were bringing me some message from her!"

"No. She didn't know I was coming. But it's her I've come to see you about. The men of the McCarthy family, Mr. Seward Ingram, would like to see what you've got to say about taking her out in your car and not bringing her back the whole night!"

Seward pitched his cigarette into the fire. The attack surprised him, but he was ready enough to meet it. "I'm sorry you should take that tone, Mr. McCarthy," he said. "It doesn't seem quite respectful to your sister. The whole thing was due to a series of accidents. It's ridiculous to pretend that she didn't tell you about them at the time."

"She did then, but when a girl is with a fellow," Joe said meaningly, "it isn't always so easy for her to say what's an accident and what is not!"

"You mean, you think I stranded her in the country on purpose? Is that what you mean?" demanded Seward. His manner continued suave and mild.

"Well you done the girl wrong. And done wrong to her family through her . . There's one way to make it up."

"I'm afraid I don't get you at all," said Seward.

"Did you ever hear of one fella paying another fella damages? Damages is what I mean. A big lump of money. Say, five thousand dollars, and we'll say no more about it."

Suddenly his hand shot out and he seized Joe's coat lapel. "Now I have it!" he cried. "You're the hopeful lad that pawned the bracelet! Got it away from her somehow and pawned it—why, that explains everything! Did you or didn't you? Of course you did!"

Joe's face confessed it, though his lips strenuously denied. "I don't know what you're talking about. I didn't come here to talk about bracelets."

"I'd give you five thousand dollars to tell me it was you, if I weren't certain of it now. Cathleen is an angel and you're a dirty little blackmailer."

"I don't stir out of this house until you come across with five grand!" said Joe.

YOUR COOKING PROBLEMS

By MARTHA LEE

Question—"What is a Bearnaise Sauce and how is it made?"—Mrs. W. E., Brighton.

Answer—Bearnaise Sauce is a rich egg sauce flavored with tarragon named from Bearn, birthplace of Henry IV of France. It may be made by adding one teaspoon each of freshly chopped parsley and fresh tarragon to Hollandaise Sauce, or one tablespoon tarragon vinegar. It is usually served with mutton chops, steaks, broiled squabs, smelts, or boiled salmon. Here is a recipe:

2 green onions
2 tbsps. tarragon vinegar
4 egg yolks, raw
1 tsp. parsley chopped fine.
4 tbsps. butter
1 tbsp. soup stock.
½ tsp. salt
⅛ tsp. paprika

Chop onion, add vinegar, bring to boiling point, let simmer until reduced one-half and strain and cool. Add yolks one at a time and stir. Cook slowly until smooth, stirring constantly; add butter gradually and keep on stirring, add soup stock and seasoning. Serve hot.

Question—"Will you please print a recipe for pickled red cabbage?" —Mrs. F. W. C., Quincy.

Answer—PICKLED RED CABBAGE—To pickle red and white cabbage, quarter and core firm cabbage and slice thin. Lay in a deep dish, sprinkle sparingly with salt, and cover. Stand 48 hours and drain. Place in jars. Have prepared a spiced vinegar—allowing to each quart one ounce of ginger, and a pinch of red pepper. (All spice may be used instead of ginger.) Boil 20 minutes, cool, pour over the cabbage and seal.

WAR OPENS ON ILLEGAL AUTO REGISTERS

Charges that many automobile owners are falsely registered from fictitious and summer residence addresses to obtain lower insurance rates were made today to State Insurance Commissioner Merton L. Brown during a public hearing on the proposed 1935 compulsory insurance rates.

Charges of false registration of automobiles were made by Representative Phillip G. Bowker of Brookline and Robert T. Bamford, town counsel of Ipswich. Only about 100 persons were present.

The majority of those attending the hearing were from Worcester, Springfield and North Shore cities and towns.

Robert T. Bamford, protesting a $9 increase in Ipswich, asked Commissioner Brown to inquire into the number of cars registered from the Little Neck section. He said he believed the majority of cars registered from that section were owned by persons who live there only a few weeks in the summer.

He said he believed the increase in registration fees for Ipswich was because of these illegal registrations.

He declared that excise tax bills returned to the town with the report "no such address" or "unknown," had revealed the existence of false registration.

Choice Bread in New Forms

By MARTHA LEE

Plain bread may be "the staff of life," but fancy bread is the gold knob on the end of it! The words "home made bread" are magic ones, that conjure up thoughts of warm fragrance and delectable flavors, and although modern matrons rely on the baker to keep the bread box filled with the everyday supply, they continue to make the extra-special kinds themselves!

Most of the fancy breads are "quick ones," which means they are quick to make, quick to bake and quick to disappear as soon as they hit the plates of the open jawed family! There are four kinds of quick bread: those made with "pour batter," "drop batter," a soft dough or a stiff dough. The pour batter is most generally used, while the stiff dough is seldom employed. As opposed to the yeast or "light" breads, the quick variety is made with baking powder or some form of leaven which acts quickly.

RUSSIA ASKED TO JOIN LEAGUE OF NATIONS

By WILLIAM HILLMAN

Universal Service Special Cable.

Geneva, Sept. 11—Geneva, the citadel of burgeois internationalism, has decided to open its doors to revolutionary Russia.

The Council of the League of Nations, object of Bolshevik hatred and contempt for years, voted to invite the Soviet government to join the League and accept a permanent seat on the council.

The vote was unanimous, as is required by the League statute for election, but unanimity was achieved only by abstention of Argentine and Portugal.

Upon the assembly, which opened its fifteenth annual session today, will fall the duty of admitting Russia. But this has been assured by action of the big powers in the council who used dictatorial measures to enforce their will in a self-proclaimed democratic institution, thus seeking to bridge the spiritual gap between the philosophies of two dead statesmen—Woodrow Wilson and Nicolai Lenin.

GUARANTEE QUESTION

The invitation will shortly be issued to Russia. There was some difficulty in framing it. The question of a formula, expressing Russian sincerity in entering the league, arose in yesterday's discussions, I am able to state on the highest authority.

New members admitted to the league must give "effective guarantees" of their sincere intention to observe its international obligations. The invitation as originally framed declared that the league is inviting Russia to join, Russia having given guarantees of its "sincerity."

FRANCE SWINGS POWER

The legal—not to say suspicious—mind of Sir John Simon, British foreign secretary, demurred; he pointed out that it was not for the council or the league, but for Russia herself to indicate in her answer to the invitation the sincerity of her intentions.

A number of other points regarding the text were raised, and the invitation was handed over for redrafting by experts.

There is no difficulty on this score. The big powers have decided. Rather, France has decided. Never has France's power been so manifest as it was in forcing suspicious Britain and the reluctant Little Entente countries to agree to bring Russia into the league.

RADICALISM, REALISM, ROYALISM . . . those were the three menaces to sobriety As Thousands Cheered last evening at the Shubert Theater . . . satirical, sardonical, sabbatical, news headlines streamed across the certains as the drama unfolded . . . while the audience boomed with laughter.

MRS. DUDLEY PICKMAN, JR.

Rare entertainment of a kind that does not assail the intellect or outrage your old world reserve, snatches of human interest join forces in a beautiful kaleidoscope which formed an ever-changing design of living . . .

The audience, which packed the theater to capacity, with the standuppers nine deep, was notable . . . this was an occasion for which Boston has been waiting for over a year and simply everyone, my dear, was enrolled . . . even Irving Berlin, who wrote the music.

Among the Fashionables

AFTER THAT BURST, we will slip back into our scribblers' retreat and tell you who were among the minks . . . in this case it was among the ermines . . . a little early for the minx. Modish Astrid Rice, one of society's loveliest mannikins, strolled in wrapped in the unborn lamb worn over a coral lace gown . . . and dark-eyed Alma Bird was Junoesque in her tailless rabbit over a bronzy-green sheath . . . they boasted about with good-looking swains, naturally.

Mrs. James C. Duane was charming in white velvet and ermine, her jewels dazzling like drop of water on snow . . . her handsome husband accompanied her.

With Hepburn bangs, Mrs. Norman Vaughan was striking in ice-blue satin as she chatted with the so-very-beautiful Mrs. George St. Clair whose black lace was most becoming . . . she wore a stunning American beauty velvet wrap heavily corded . . .

Mrs. Dudley Pickman, Jr., Attends

PRETTY, BLONDE MRS. HUGH BANCROFT was fragile as an orchid in hyacinth blue satin trimmed with fushia velvet . . . ermines, of course. She and Hugh were in a party which included Mr. and Mrs. Ernest R. Howes, Jr., Mrs. Howes in her favorite sheer black and Spanish rose corsage.

From Cohasset we note Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Menard and from Framingham we glimpsed Mr. and Mrs. Weston Adams, the latter in a snouzy black sheath with huge white velvet collar . . .

True to her first love, the stage, Mrs. Dudley Pickman, Jr., attended as always with Mr. Pickman . . . a veteran first-nighter. Her Chinchilla cape over black satin was smart and very richly becoming. Mrs. William Brace Pratt, one of Boston's best dressed matrons, was slender and lovely in sky-blue satin with lavender velvet sash. Mr. John Minns was accompanied by a bronze-haired lady, Miss Vicki Maxwell, attired in Victorian brown taffeta . . .

Dorothy Stone, the adorable star of "As Thousands Cheer," appeared this afternoon at the garden fete on the estate of Mrs. Edward Brandegee in Jamaica Plain for the benefit of the Mount Pleasant Home for the Aged and will do three of her famous impersonations, Barbara Hutton, Lynn Fontaine and Joan Crawford, in three gowns designed for her by Theadore . . .

LOVE, LEARNING AND LADIES DON'T MIX---SAYS OUTLINE OF "PERFECT WOMAN"

Beauty Is First Requirement But a Modest Disposition Should Go Along, Too

By Sheilah Graham

THIS IS NOT a photograph. It's not even a dream. It's too impossible even for a dream, but it clarifies my thoughts on what I would like to be myself. It's something other females could be without hurting themselves too much.

A perfect woman. Beautiful. Yes, but not overpoweringly so. The too beautiful woman is usually an uncharitable beast who can only see herself in the mirror of life.

My ideas on good looks are regular features allied to a "There must be others as easy on the eyesight as I am" disposition.

She must have several ideas in her pretty little head, but must thumb her nose at acknowledging to an overdose of intelligence.

Love, learning and ladies don't seem to mix. I have never yet spent an hour with a self-styled brainy girl without yearning to slay her.

She must be fairly truthful herself, but at the same time realize that truth from others is relatively unimportant and that it is sometimes more blessed to receive a lie than hear the truth. (Refer to my handbook on "The Lies of Husbands.")

HONESTY NECESSARY

She must be honest. Honesty among women is about as nonexistent as honesty among thieves. My perfect woman will start a new fashion. She will be honest with herself.

She will not throw a haze of hunk over her action. If she does a mean thing she will know it is a mean thing.

If she steals another woman's man (some women are such saps even a perfect woman would find this difficult to avoid) she will call it plain theft and not something fancy like "We couldn't help it on account of we are soulmates."

My perfect woman must have enough money to prevent her marrying a man for whom her affection cannot be even described as lukewarm for the sake of three meals and a bed

She must possess that rare feminine quality known as restraint. She must keep her head when all her sex "are losing theirs and blaming it on the other person."

She must not brawl like the proverbial fishwife when angry, nor cackle like the hyena when amused. Her personality must be restful and quiet

APPRECIATE LIQUOR

Like my perfect man, she must appreciate liquor, but—and this must be her leading liquor law—she must always drink one less cocktail or highball than renders her a nuisance.

She can be a smoker—but definitely not of the chain variety.

She must be sweet and tolerant, not only when her friends are in trouble, but when they are happy and successful.

A woman has to be pretty tough to withhold her sympathy from her friends when they are down. Very few do. But you can count those on the other side of the picture on a tenth of your fingers. A woman, or a man for that matter, has to be a big shot at heart to remain sympathetic when good fortune knocks at another's door.

My perfect woman must be a lady of a certain number of words—but no more. There are few things as painful as the female voice when it forgets to shut up.

My perfect woman will never nag. She will know that it takes two to make a silence satisfyingly uncomfortable.

To Achieve a Starry-Eyed Look

POSED BY IDA LUPINO

By Juliet Shelby

IF YOU ARE GOING coquettish this season along with the rest of the world, even to wearing the rakish pancake berets, seductive with velvet and pears and perfume, your eyes will come in for their share of flirtatious abandon.

Unless you are set on wearing last year's hat you'll have to give a thought to exciting eye make-up—a subject that, unfortunately is neglected by the majority of women. It's quite as necessary using mascara and eye shadow as rouging your lips or powdering your nose

If you have been over-tolerant about your personal appearance all summer, preferring the relaxation of front porches and comfortable rockers, to boudoir activity, one of the nicest ways to start reforming is to learn to use eye make-up. If you are over forty, you've probably never acquired the habit, for when we were young it wasn't considered "nice" to use lash or brow darkeners. Today all is changed, and making-up one's eyes and brows is recognized along with tinted nail polish, as smart and circumspect

It is almost magical the way mascara and eye-shadow has of taking 10 to 15 years off one's age and it is about the easiest route to acquire glamour that I know of.

There is a new mascara on the market with an oil base that won't go beading or flaking on your lashes. Each lash stands out softly, beautifully, and gives that "starry-eyed" look we all try so hard to achieve. It comes in an apple-green enamel case—almost gem-like in appearance—and contains mirror, fine brush and mascara. This mascara is in four shades—black, blue, brown and chatain—and is not expensive.

If you are in the market for lipstick with permanence, that is dramatic but not theatrical, I know of a one-handed wonder that is just the thing for you. It is sponsored by the same famous firm that is bringing out the mascara, and is a thing of beauty. It is automatic and slides up and down in the same fashion as a "button" The case is gold-tone metal decorated with a floral motif in green, gold and scarlet. The sliding gadget is plastic—in ivory tone. Lest this description of grandeur frighten you, let me assure you its price is within your budget.

This lipstick, which is done in the modern manner, comes in four shades besides a new tone that borders on a poinsettia cast. This new shade is a radiant color accent for nearly every complexion type I have ever seen

To learn the names of this lipstick and the mascara and where you can buy them in Boston, telephone Juliet Shelby, Liberty 4000. If you prefer writing for this information, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Miss Shelby, Boston Evening American, Boston.

Hold-Up Plays Are Daring Bluffs

By Josephine Culbertson

(This is one of a series of articles in which Mrs. Culbertson explains certain principles of the new Culbertson System of Play. The examples and rules given by Mrs. Culbertson in these articles have never been published heretofore and are exclusive in Boston with Boston Evening American.)

Many writers have made the mistake of considering the "hold-up play" one which is used by Declarer only, and never by his opponents. Nothing could be more erroneous. Not only does the defending team have to use the hold-up play on any number of different occasions, but many beautiful refinements of the hold-up play—which are in reality daring bluffs—are included in the repertoire of a smart defending team, whereas the Declarer can never use them.

For example, when there is a long suit such as A Q J x x x in Dummy and no outside entry, and when Declarer takes a finesse in that suit the adversary who sits over Dummy should refuse to win the King, even though he holds K x and the hold-up play will necessitate leaving his King unguarded. It is true that the Declarer may play the Ace on the next round, but he very seldom will because he has no way of knowing where the King is and will hope that his finesse was actually successful.

Even when holding two stoppers in the suit led it is proper for the adversaries to use the hold-up play when only one side entry is apparent in Dummy.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♢	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Against South's three-notrump contract West opened the heart 3 Dummy played the deuce, East the Queen and South the King. South now led the club Jack and finessed

If East wins at this point with the club Queen, three notrump will be made; if East plays the club 2 and lets South hold the first trick the contract will be defeated. In actual play, East took the club Queen and led a spade. South played the King and West played the seven in order to make sure of two spade tricks when East led the suit again. South now led his second club, Dummy's ten losing to East's Ace. Another spade lead by East gave West two tricks, but they were the last tricks East and West won

South took three tricks in clubs three in hearts, one in spades and two in diamonds by taking a finesse for East's King. If East had not taken the Queen of clubs on the first round, South could never have established the club suit. He would have led another club, which East would have won. Now if South used Dummy's heart Ace to lead a third round of clubs and establish the suit, he could never cash the established tricks because there would be no second entry back to Dummy. As the hand was played, South won three club tricks; had East held up, he could have won only one—a difference of two tricks

Peroxide and Ammonia Bleach

Question—Can you tell me how I can bleach my rather dark hair? I have tried peroxide, but I was discouraged at the result.

C. C. R., Waverley

Answer—If I cannot dissuade you from bleaching your hair, I can at least tell you of the most harmless method I know.

To 10 tablespoonsful of peroxide add two tablespoonfuls of ordinary ammonia. Beat until cloudy. Apply the lotion to fresh-shampooed hair, before it is quite dry with a piece of absorbent cotton.

Part the hair and apply to entire length. Pin up each strand after applying the bleach. Sit in a dry room (not in the sun) until the hair is thoroughly dry.

Letters bearing the following signatures are being held because no stamped, self-addressed envelopes were inclosed with the requests. If the writers will kindly comply with the rules and repeat their questions, the desired information will be forwarded to them.

The slender knitted rib is worked in opposite directions, exactly like the ribbed materials in smartest frocks. A scarf is tucked around the neck and pulled through the opening. Contrast plays an important part in the smartness of this outfit. GIVEN IN MARRIAGE

CHAPTER 137

DICKY'S QUESTION to [illegible] brother-in-law apparently so [illegible] innocuous, sent my hand to my throat in that curious age-old, instinctive gesture which women use in times of stress. For I knew that the question was not casual and that, in common with every one else in the room, he feared that some real injury to Baby Faith had resulted from the prank of the boys.

But I had no leisure to indulge my own fear. Such stark terror was mirrored in the eyes of Junior and Roderick, as they stood facing me and waiting for Dr. Braithwaite's verdict, that I moved quickly across to them and put an arm around each trembling little figure.

"Hush!" I whispered quickly, as they clung to me convulsively. And then Dr. Braithwaite was speaking again, and bringing ecstatic relief to all our hearts

"There's no reason why we can't all see her," he said. "But I must ask you all not to speak. Katherine is hushing her to sleep"

He turned and led the way back into the nursery and we followed him, first the two little boys with me, for Dicky had waved us on, then Harriet with my father, and last Dicky and his mother.

THE BOYS ARE REASSURED

The nursery looked like the abode of peace, with the last rays of the late autumn sun coming through the windows and lighting up Katherine's silhouetted figure, as she sat in a low chair with Faith in her arms. She looked up with bright reassurance as we filed in, but put her finger to her lips

The caution was not needed ever. Not one of us spoke, nor did we linger. Faith was awake, and I guessed that Katherine's deft, tender hands had sponged all traces of her fright from her tiny face

Junior and Roderick, their hands convulsively clutching mine, looked at her with eyes as keen and searching as my own and then we gave place to the others. We were the first to go back into the other room, and as if by common consent, we went out into the hall before a word was spoken.

"Gee! Mums!" Junior's voice was a paean of thanksgiving. "Did you see her? She was smiling, and her eyes were kind of dancing up and down, the way they always do. She's all right, isn't she Mums?"

"Yes, darling," I answered. "She isn't hurt at all." And then, without warning, the two small boys burst into the tears they had been too frightened to shed, and with their hard young arms wound tightly about me, they wept abandonedly in what I knew was reaction from the terror which had been gripping them.

"Boys!" I admonished sharply. "You mustn't let Aunt Harriet see you cry like this!" And as their sobs subsided into convulsive whimperings, I turned them about and made my way as well as I could, hampered by their clinging arms, to the door of Dicky's room

NO MORE TEARS

"You must not go in now, Junior," I said steadily, "and wait until one of us comes to you."

With a little thrill I heard my small son's voice, steady now, in reply

"You don't need to worry any more about us, Mums. We're not going to cry any more. It was only because we were so glad about Ruby Pearl—that she wasn't hurt—Oh! There I go again, calling her that!"

"But you said we could call her that when we're just alone with you, didn't you, Auntie Madge?" Roderick struck in. He had been bobbing his head absurdly and saying "Me, too," in reiterated punctuation of Junior's little speech to me.

Even in ordinary circumstances, however, I should have chuckled at the confusion of the boys, for it brought irresistibly to my mind the memory of their insistence that the new baby be called Ruby Pearl or Pearl Ruby, names which had been born in the mind of Jerry, the gangling son of the Ticers, our neighbors and occasional helpers. It had been with difficulty that I had won them over to the cognomen of Faith, and at their entreaty I had made a pact with them guaranteeing their right to call the baby by their absurd names when they were alone with her, or when I was present, but upon no other occasion.

A LINGERING FEAR

"Yes; I told you that," I said, "and I know it was only a slip of the tongue when Junior spoke that name before the rest just now. But I must go back to the others now, and you must stay quietly here."

I bent and kissed their upturned faces, and returned their fervent embrace. Then Junior's words followed me down the hall.

"We don't care what happens to us now, as long as Faith's all right," he said.

I echoed that sturdy avowal. But as I neared the others, standing in the hall outside the door of Katherine's sitting room, I scored myself for not being able to shake off a lingering unreasonable fear for my baby daughter

Never Hang Up Your Knit Things

By Annice Brink

THIS story will not point the finger of scorn at those who carefully place knitted frocks on hangers and then wonder why the frocks become long as a pessimist's face and embarrassingly tight in some places. No, because I have done exactly the same thing

These hand-made things that have taken such an important place in our wardrobe are precious. And they will last and last, giving endless service if you will do but a few simple things

Lacy, loosely knitted things suffer especially from hanging. The shoulders develop unnatural points. If it is a one-piece dress, the skirt will drag down around the ankles

Lots of tissue paper and drawer space dedicated especially to their care is the best treatment for knits. Fold up the garment loosely as in packing, with plenty of tissue padding.

Skirts which have begun to bag a little at the back may be laid on a flat surface, front down; then place paper over the back and the sides, and fold back the lower part of the skirt

Probably you know the trick of turning the skirt of your separate suit-and-skirt combination around when it begins to sag, wearing the back in the front. If yours is a circular knit with slight gores, it is probable that it is never put on in quite the same position, and so seems to keep its shape indefinitely.

Give your woolens a rest frequently; you will find the natural resiliency will bring them snapping back into form.

It is fairly simple to steam a dress yourself; and if you can't give it enough rest to keep it looking fresh, steaming is necessary.

If you can afford it—in the long run it is more inexpensive—two skirts with your knit suit will give you greater service, and when they are in different colors give the effect of entirely different ensembles

Wedding Gift Letters

By MRS. BEECKMAN

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

1. I am to be married next month and I would be grateful to you if you will tell me how and when are the letters of thanks to be written, and how are they to be signed?

2. Would it be correct for me to wear a veil, as it is to be a church wedding? We will not have a reception, just a family dinner after the ceremony. N

1. You will be a very wise and polite bride-to-be if you write a note of thanks for a gift just as soon as possible after it has been received. The ideal thing is for a bride-to-be to write each day notes for all the gifts that have been received that day. Then she will leave on her trip with all her thank-you notes written, except perhaps the notes for those presents received at the very last minute

Since all wedding presents are sent to the bride-to-be and belong to her, it is she who writes all the notes of thanks, and to these notes she signs her name. In her notes she of course mentions her fiance, and tells of his appreciation of the gift and of his enthusiasm for it . . ."Jack and I are delighted with your beautiful thought of us, and we are so happy to have the lovely candlesticks which you so generously sent us."

2. If you wish to stamp your wedding as a formal one, you wear a veil. Then all of the details of the wedding must be carried out in a formal way . . . clothes of the wedding party, clothes of the groom and his attendants, and so forth. The fact that you are not to have a reception does not make any difference. It is the formality of the church wedding that makes the difference.

Noisy Surroundings Have a Bad Effect on Children

By LISA GRENELLE

IT IS BETTER to hit a child than to raise your voice to it. It will do him less permanent harm. It will be easier on his nervous system, and he will dread it less

Children fear noise, in spite of the fact they love to make it. It is because of their fear of it that they love to make it a sort of retaliation—revenge. They want to scare somebody else, shock somebody else, the way they were shocked and scared.

Many a parent brags that his little boy can sleep through any kind of commotion. I wonder how well that child does sleep? It isn't the fact that you sleep, but how well you sleep, how much that sleep rests you that matters

It takes several seconds for anyone to recover from the shock of an unexpected explosion. It often takes several hours for a small child to regain his equilibrium from the shock of his mother's or father's sudden yip of anger.

For longevity, for efficiency, for health and for happiness the most important lesson man must learn and pass on to his offspring is how to rest—how to relax—how to keep calm! And children can't learn to relax in a home where they have reason to expect the nervous shock of a raised and angry voice.

What $16,000 buys in The American Weekly

A full page in color more than twice the size of any other magazine page in the world . . . more than 5,000,000 families at a cost of less than ⅓ of a cent per family . . . The attention of the entire family instead of a single buying factor.

IT takes a lot of groceries to feed the more than five million families who read The American Weekly regularly.

Any statistician can estimate how many tons of cereal, baking powder, tea, coffee, meats and canned goods these families consume in a day, week, month or year.

The manufacturer's problem is more difficult. He can buy any one of a dozen kinds of advertising media—magazines, newspapers, billboards, radio or whatnot, in the belief he is doing a thorough advertising job.

But there is one medium that delivers an advertising message to the greatest number of families; one magazine which can prove its ability to sell goods. That magazine is The American Weekly.

And no form of advertising can match its economy.

For $16,000 you can buy a color page in The American Weekly and tell your sales story to more than five million families at a cost of one-third cent per family reached.

That is why the list of prominent advertisers on the left continues to grow year after year.

That is why we say to you, The American Weekly will bring you the most sales for the least money.

Where this Magazine goes

The American Weekly is the largest magazine in the world. It is distributed through 17 great Hearst Sunday Newspapers. In 597 of America's 995 towns and cities of 10,000 population and over, The American Weekly concentrates 67% of its circulation.

In each of 134 cities, it reaches one out of every two families
In 125 more cities, 40 to 50% of the families
In an additional 165 cities, 30 to 40%
In another 173 cities, 20 to 30%

. . . and, in addition, more than 1,885,000 families in thousands of other communities, large and small, regularly buy and read The American Weekly.

Where can you spend your advertising dollar more effectively?

HULTMAN TO DECIDE OFFICER'S JOB

This Is Life
ROBERT E. ROGERS

I was reminded while viewing a moving picture the other day, of the best piece of publicity campaigning for a film that I remember ever to have seen. I refer to the series of articles in this newspaper published in advance of the showing in Boston of "The Affairs of Cellini."

Robert E. Rogers

I read five of them. There may have been more. They were written by literateurs no less renowned than John Erskine, author of "The Private Life of Helen of Troy"; Konrad Berkovici, story teller of Gypsy romance; Richard Halliburton, the fortunate youth of adventure; Faith Baldwin, wholesaler in romance, and the late Thorne Smith, author of "The Night Life of the Gods," and similar jocular improprieties.

The point about this list of writers, each of whom retold one of the immortal episodes from Benvenuto Cellini's autobiography, is that each one had a certain quality which made him ideal to publicize Cellini—artist, lover, braggart, brawler, essence of the Renaissance. Erskine's line is exactly that tone of highly inventive and ingenious spoofing which is done so deliciously in the film. Thorne Smith's tone was one of incredible and cockeyed amorous adventure, characteristic alike of the original Cellini and his celluloid shadow. Berkovici, who knows the Gypsies, knows also the hot, passionate, revengeful temper of 16th century Florence. Halliburton is the sort of person who would like to do Benvenuto's stunts and could carry them off with something of that youth's innocent certainty that he was always a hero and never a villain. And Faith Baldwin is at home wherever a man and a woman are the theme.

My only regret is that a Boston newspaper did not print one article by the man who has written the best of recent books on Cellini, the successful "Daggers and Jewels" by William Dana Orcutt, one of Boston's most famous novelists.

The film and the play from which it was made answers once and for all one question which every person who has ever read Cellini has asked himself. How much of a liar was Benvenuto? Not about his art. His goldsmith work and his Perseus remain to prove that he was in his genre an incomparable artist. But was he the best shot in Italy? Did he save Rome and the Papal Court almost single handed with his arquebus? Was he invariably the victor in a six-sided brawl with rapier and dagger? Did he steal the Pope's gold and did he sass the Pope to his face? Did he effect that marvelous escape from the Castle of Saint Angelo? And did he always get the best of it with the women? These be serious questions.

It is by inserting just enough of these doubts into a story which, on the whole, takes Cellini at his own valuation that the author makes his fable so happy. He takes no episode out of the man's life. But he composes an episode, so perfectly in the spirit of the book, so absolutely like Cellini, that one accepts it without question. These things did not happen to Cellini, but they might have. The willing suspension of disbelief, in Coleridge's famous phrase, is so easy for the spectator that he willy-nilly approves. He never once feels the discomfort which Cecil De Mille's betrayal of history, of legend, of tradition, of probability, of taste and mood and likelihood, fills him when viewing the blue plate special called "Cleopatra." I am sure that Cellini himself would have been highly complimented.

I nearly said that for once here is a costume picture free from the overwhelming flavor of romantic hokum and hooey. All the machinery is there to produce something dreadful like Barrymore's old "Don Juan" picture or a Belasco "Du Barry." What saves it is humor. It is exactly the same thing that saved Charles Laughton's Henry VIII from saccharine romanticized history in the key of "When Nighthood Was in Flower." This winking over history's shoulder, this razzing of melodrama, which was the speciality of Alexandre Dumas and of Bernard Shaw, is a great gift for one capable of using it. I suggest that California lay off the Great Catherines and the Christinas, done in the lamentable heavy manner, and give us more Henry the Eighths and Cellinis in the spoofing manner.

After all, history is serious only when it is happening to us

BOG RIOTS FEARED ON THUG INFLUX

Carver, Sept. 11—Serious outbreaks of violence were feared here today in the strike of the cranberry pickers union, when it was believed that "strong arm" men from New York had been imported.

Chief William A. Smith of the Carver police ordered all officers to take every precaution on night patrol, following an attempt to lure him to a lonely spot by a fake telephone call.

FOUR STUNNED BY BOLTS

Four persons were stunned and many buildings struck during a severe thunderstorm that centered over Greater Boston

At the home of Frank S. Shapiro, of Mandalay road, Center Newton, Mrs. Shapiro and their three children were stunned when lightning entered the living room of the house through the chimney

In Hingham four buildings were struck, most serious loss occurring at the home of Everett Story, of River street, where fire did damage of about $500.

NEWPORT JEWEL ROBBERY TIP WINS $25

By The NEWS TIP EDITOR

A Newport, R. I. woman was slugged, robbed of $18,500 in jewels and left on the floor of her garage. Larry Golden, of 20 Deflauriers avenue, Webster, heard about it and called Liberty 4000—the American city editor while doctors still worked over the unconscious woman.

That's why he gets $25 for the best news tip of last week. It was an exclusive story. Such stories happen every day. You may stumble on one by accident. But it will be no accident if you call Liberty 4000. That will be putting yourself in line for next week's prizes

WOMAN GETS PRIZE

Second prize of $10 today went to a person who asked that his name be withheld. He informed of an attempted robbery. The third prize—$5—went to Ann McNamara, 4 Highland street, Haverhill, for word of a payroll holdup there

The $1 prizes were paid to

PHONE TIPS QUICKLY

Name withheld; news of a girl falling four floors and escaping with her life.

H. B. Rice, 123 Essex street, Saugus, who knew it was news when six persons were overcome by ammonia fumes.

Remember that the Boston Evening American pays these same news tip prizes every week. When you see something that ought to be in print, call Liberty 4000. It pays.

Prize Cow Takes Bow at Brockton Fair

The third day of the Brockton Fair is on. Loads of fun are offered at the big annual event, this year carrying an added thrill—a grand rodeo. Agnes McKenna, above, of Taunton, is shown with "Green Mountain Anna," owned by F. W. Morrison, of Taunton, and a proud prize winner at the fair. Anna listens calmly to the judges' praise. Woman, 62, Dies Taking Auto Test

After passing her oral and reading test in her examination for a driver's license at Fish Pier Miss Annie M. Smith, 62, of Mellen street, Dorchester, died of a heart attack. She had just started her road test at the pier, when her foot pressed the accelerator and she slumped to the floor of the car.

Peabody Man Died of Crash Injuries

Police investigating the mysterious death of Harry B. Larrabee, 56, of Berry street, Peabody, today expressed the opinion that the man suffered internal injuries when thrown against a door handle as the auto in which he was riding, struck a tree. He was taken to the Thomas Hospital, Peabody, from his home the night following the accident.

OUSTER FACES PATROLMAN IN GUN SQUABBLE

Police Commissioner Hultman will decide today whether or not Patrolman Albert F. Clifford of Charlestown will be dismissed from the police department. It is expected this will follow a trial board's recommendation of dismissal.

Clifford's trial on charges of disobedience of rules and neglect of duty was based on an unusual incident. At 3 a. m. on September 1, Clifford was allegedly marched from a house in Baldwin street, Charlestown, at the point of his own gun

MINUS HAT, COAT

According to evidence, he was minus his hat, coat, club and one puttee as well as his service revolver. Joseph Daley, in whose house the officer is alleged to have gone without permission, held the gun, witnesses said

Testimony before the police trial board was that Clifford entered the house first. Two shots were fired into the ceiling, allegedly by Daley

Clifford claims that Daley, who had been drinking, entered first, and that he, Clifford, was disarmed in a hallway scuffle and forced to take off some of his uniform.

REFUSED TO TESTIFY

Daley refused to take the stand at the trial board hearing because his charges against Clifford are pending in Charlestown court. His wife, Mrs. Martha Daley, testified.

She said that she was awakened by two shots but went back to sleep when she found that neither her husband nor the police officer had been injured.

Police say that there was considerable disagreement between versions of what took place, but the board's finding was that Clifford was guilty and should be dismissed from the force.

O. O. McIntyre
NEW YORK
DAY BY DAY

New York, Sept. 11—The new and grandest tunnel—Midtown Hudson—inaugurates a slum clearance that presages doom of Hell's Kitchen. Already a number of tenants have vacated and rickety buildings are coming down to make way for a sweeping terraced approach.

O. O. McIntyre

The Holland tunnel approach pierced a similar area and almost immediately the entire neighborhood was replaced by modern structures. The Midtown Hudson plaza will be 75 feet wide, running north from 34th to 42d streets between Ninth and Tenth avenues. Flowered, terraced and cement walked.

Courts have sanctioned the real estate processes of buying up secretly the property for such municipal improvements. It is done by the city through real estate subsidiaries. Otherwise racketeers, getting wind of such activities, would raid the coveted land for holdup prices.

Hell's Kitchen has long been a glowering, two-fisted strip, glorified in song, story and movie. It has turned out sidewalk dandies such as George Raft, dock walloping political leaders such as Dick Butler, and beautiful stars such as Ruby Keeler. The rookie cop is often sent there to be toughened.

There is a wistful nostalgia in the autobiographical inscription Max Miller sends me on the fly page of his new book, "The Second House from the Corner." It reads: "From this little pin feather out West who was fool enough to write himself out of a regular job." Every reporter who has risen to novelist feels that twinge with new affluence. He longs for the roar of the presses, the aroma of ink. Max Miller had a swell time covering the San Diego water front for many years.

Perhaps the most notable example of the editorial room's lure is George S. Kaufman, the playwright. He turned out one play success after another until Variety reported his royalties $8000 a week. Yet he would not at that time give up his job in the dramatic department of a morning paper. Instead of basking in the glory that was his, he hunched over a typewriter in the clackety-clack of the news room

* * *

Max Baer, all too soon, learned the fickleness of public acclaim. Almost over night, he seemed destined to become the champion of champions. He had all the ingredients—physique, a neat tongue, warming smile and the quality schools on Fifth avenue now peddle as charm. He came his first cropper at his New York personal appearance. Quickly his $8000 salary was shucked to $5000. He went on what was intended a 30-week tour. Theaters began to cancel and in a few weeks audience reaction so shriveled that in Chicago, which gave him the warmest reception of all, the hegira was abandoned, all hands paid off.

A professor of psychology, to whom I just phoned, tells me that with a world in doldrums, people are not interested in popular heroes such as Max Baer. Indeed, they resent them. Every depression brings the fulfillment of the biblical prophecy: "The meek shall inherit the earth." Wise-cracking films go out like a light. Smart alec essays are dismissed with a glance. Baer, in a measure, is a victim of this shifting thought. It may be only temporary, but it deprives him of the chief asset of a championship—that brief stretch for a hurried financial cleanup.

Mrs. E. B. White is regarded, next to Harold Ross, as the guiding genius of the flourishing New Yorker. She came to the publication in its frail formative days from a finishing school, married "Andy" White, the shy E. B. W., who is deservedly the publication's stellar "Talk of the Town" paragrapher. She is reputed to supply the distinct quality called editorial taste. With Carmel Snow editing Harper's Bazaar, women are more or less in control of the two top-notch class magazines.

My recent panegyric for the colorful port of Antwerp as a vista has brought a kodak shot of it from the top floor of Europe's only and, of course, tallest sky-scraper, a 23-story building in the heart of Antwerp. The occupant, incidentally, is Lloyd Ring Coleman, an American, who, with his family, lives on the 23d floor.

Robert Louis Stevenson said there was only one rule for a writer—to omit. And I was ready to quit with the paragraph above when the mail man brings me the clipping of an ad for a strawberry festival by the colored folk in my crotch of the creek. A foot note reads: "Owing to the depression, prunes will be served."

Thrifty Wife Urged to Procure Part of Fuel Supply Now

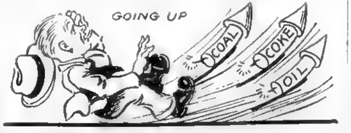
Coal Prices Expected to Jump Higher This Winter

By RUTH MUGGLEBEE

(This is the sixth of a series of articles on the increasing cost of living and how it may be met with proper economical measures.)

Coal, coke and oil are going up in price. Everything points to a substantial advance this Winter.

That is the official statement of Ralph W. Robart, director of the division of Necessaries of Life in the State Department of Labor and Industries.



Consumer prices for coal, upon which dealers have been soliciting orders for the coming cold season, he points out, are between $1.50 and $2 higher than last year.

The director adds that fuel oil and range oil, has advanced in price. State figures show that there has been a rise of almost one per cent in these commodities. Federal figures reveal that coal prices moved up ½ per cent from June to July, when such an increase is not generally observed until August. And in August, the price kept on soaring

COAL PRICES UP

Coal prices this year are almost 9 per cent higher than last year. Fuel and light together, according to government findings, show an increase of 5.1 per cent.

Continuing, Mr. Robart explains that there is a "necessity and a likelihood that rentals will advance substantially."

For those who can afford it, the director urges immediate buying of coal and coke in order to take advantage of present prices.

Estimating the minimum amount of fuel necessary for four to five rooms, where the kitchen range is used for both heating and cooking during the Winter months, the Community Health Association offers these suggestions.

Plan to buy two bags of coal this month; at least five bags of coal and three bags of wood in October; eight bags of coal and three bags of wood in November; 14 bags of coal and three bags of wood in December. All together this amount should, if you are watchful and careful, carry you over the cold-weather months.

THRIFTY WIFE READY

If range oil is used, allow 21 gallons per week. This will usually permit the use of two burners all day and one at night for the severe cold weather.

The thrifty wife is prepared for coal expenditures to some extent, because she budgeted her weekly income over the warm-weather months. This gives her a start to meet the cold-weather obligation.

In planning estimates for fuel and light, one should always include rent. The three go hand-in-hand. One cannot be separated from the other. Actually the householder should only spend for a month's rental less than what his weekly income is. Hence if the weekly income is $22.50, say the household economists, his monthly rental should not be more than $16.50 a month, or one-sixth of the year's income

For this reason, the distressed Arlington housewife, who has only a $12 weekly income, should not, as she says she does, expend $5 a week for rent. That amount is way over her ability to make both ends meet. It deprives her and her family of the other necessities and automatically forces her to cut down on her food budget which is so extremely important.

BUDGET NECESSARY

Budgeting is an important thing for the limited means householder. When one has surplus means, one needs only to protect his worth. But when the average person has only definite weekly income he must plan and budget.

When one spends wisely, one saves in the long run.

When one budgets, one plans for the future. Without some sort of organized spending, the family head cannot hope to be adequately prepared to meet economic exigencies as they arise

If the housewife, whose husband turned in $22.50 a week, set aside $6.40 every week for rent fuel and light, paying out between $4 and $4.50 a week for rent, she would have been able to save the remainder during summer and spring and early fall months, to carry her over the cold season.

SAVE FOR SUPPLIES

And out of this amount, ten cents a week should be set aside for household supplies. Otherwise the food allocation suffers. This small weekly allowance would take care of such items as soap, matches, and other incidentals.

If possible 20 cents per capita is necessary, for replacement of worn-out household equipment.

SEPTEMBER

In dependent families, the Community Health Association has found health care must be met as the need arises. In independent families the unusual need must be met from savings. In all the low-income groups, free clinics and dispensaries should be used when possible.

In making other allowances, the association allots 10 to 35 cents a week for church for adults; one to five cents weekly for church for children and union dues when necessary, at least one daily and Sunday paper, 22 cents a week; 25 cents a week for each adult and five or ten cents per week for each child for insurance.

Virginia Bruce

The most sought after young lady in Hollywood is Virginia Bruce, former wife of Jack Gilbert. Her charm and blonde loveliness have made her one of the most popular unattached gals in the colony. You can't tell which one of these swains Virginia likes best. She seems impartial but at the moment [illegible] qualifies as her favorite tennis player. They have been playing tennis every day this week.

Things are looking up for Gilbert Roland. Last week he was free lancing and playing in dozens of foreign dramas. Today he is a Fox player with a contract and ambitious plans for his future. Fox expects to build Gilbert who certainly has appeal for the femmes both off and on the screen, and make him a star. I believe it can be done because Gilbert can act and we all know the boy has the looks and the necessary personality.

Who wouldn't give up a trip to New York for a chance to direct "The Great Barnum?" Walter Lang, who was a very close friend of Russ Columbo and who was greatly upset over his tragic death, was told by Darryl Zanuck today that he wins the prize. All the directors I know were anxious for a crack at this picture because there is so much color to it and a real chance to make some great entertainment.

Calamity Rides on The Wings of Youth; Ouimet's Defeat

By AUSTEN LAKE

Austen Lake

THE STORY OF FRANCIS OUIMET'S first round defeat on the bosky dells and grassy dingles of The Country Club is the story of effervescent youth lifting itself by its own bootstraps to new emotional heights The unknown, a black-haired, blocky lad of 18, beats the veteran darling of the community, a seasoned internationalist of 21 years' background.

Somehow Ouimet's defeat is the reverse side of his own baptismal experience on these same Brookline acres—21 years ago—when Francis was an apple-cheeked boy of 19, who beat Britain's hoary aces, Vardon and Ray

I recall he said of this: "I didn't expect to win. So I played a carefree, innocent game, free from pressure."

In the intervening years, Francis' game has entered the stage of Vardon's and Ray's, when he met them in '13, coldly competent, mathematically precise. But, inevitably, the fires of youthful enthusiasm that flare to the challenge have become banked.

What Francis said of himself, 21 years ago, young Bobby Jones (not Robert Tyre Jones of course, but an obscure youth from up-country) might say of himself now. "I didn't expect to win, so I . . ."

THE ANGELS ARE ON THE SIDE of youth" (Old Spanish). That exuberant, chance-taking, all-or-nothing spirit made schoolboys with peach fuzz on unshaven cheeks the most daring combat aviators in the World War

They plunged ahead for high stakes, quick on the nervous trigger and often beat cold, crafty veterans by their headlong rush

"I want young men," said a big insurance executive recently, "because they don't know the odds they are bucking in this game

It's the thing, to my mind, which prevents pro football from ever supplanting the college game. Better science, perfect technique, but with less of that desperate hallelujah fling that stamps the school and college boys

A GALLERY OF, PERHAPS, 1500 PERSONS followed Ouimet and young Jones, suffering as only loving followers of a great sports character can suffer. They leaned like the incoming tide when Francis putted, and moaned like a November wind when he missed. And once at the 16th green, when Francis tapped a 40-footer that dipped on the edge of the rabbit hole and trickled away, there were pretty feminine "ohs' and hoarse male grunts, a sort of Amen to Francis' hope.

The putt, but for a hair's misbalance, would have squared the match, and, possibly, have shattered the youthful confidence of young Jones.

LATEST NOTE IN MALE GOLFING fashion was inserted by Jack Cameron, the Canadian badminton champion, National League hockey referee and Toronto golfer. He wore shorts of gunmetal color, exposing a pair of muscular knees that might have graced a college fullback Baby blue stockings and a steel blue pullover completed the ensemble

It was an example of sang froid and self-confidence amid the somber, even dowdy, uniforms of the other players, some of whom were dressed after the picnic fashion of the married men versus the bachelors' teams in a department store outing.

CHICK EVANS, MANY TIMES HOLDER of the open and amateur championships and a historic figure in the American game, was followed only by his caddy. Such is fleeting fame.

"Where did you get it?" I asked. "Funny thing, but I don't know," said he frankly. "It happened in my Worcester bout the other night, but I don't remember."

Will some authority on human punishment please rise and tell the class how a man can get such a swollen, plum-colored optic and not know how or when?

IN THE DAILY BASKET OF LETTERS which are coming in from Greater Boston twilight baseball fans to recommending certain players for the Boston American-Braves "scouting contest" comes one which praises a young first baseman in glowing terms.

'He can run, hit and field better than any boy around here," says the letter, which winds up: "May I add that I am his mother."

It recalls the day, several years ago that a middle-aged gentleman came into the Red Sox office and attempted to have a young semi-pro from Worcester signed by Bob Quinn. The man worked himself into a frenzy over the lad's ability until finally he said, "And I don't say this because I am his uncle."

It also recalls the yarn of the two native Irishmen who were discussing jumping prowess.

"I know a lad in the old country who could jump 27 feet," said one.

"A-a-a-a-h," snorted the other. "Nobody lives that can jump 27 feet."

"Yes, sir," affirmed the other stoutly. "And I'll tell you who. It was your own brother."

"Ah now," said the scoffer. "That may be."

IT HAS FREQUENTLY BEEN ADVANCED as an argument against the Olympic games that sport fans the flame of international distrust. Just now several London newspapers are whipping up a story that the Yankee America's Cup defender Rainbow does not meet race specifications below decks.

They claim, which the builders deny vehemently, that the living quarters, supposed to be permanent cabins, fully fitted, are nothing more than fiber partitions. So much for the promotion of amity between sporting nations.

MERE CHILD

Jacobson, like the Jones who beat Ouimet yesterday, is a mere child He's 16 and recently won the New Jersey junior title. He was runnerup to Tommy Goodwin in New York State qualifying round and is a senior at Franklin School, New York. Unlike Jones who is to matriculate at Brown Jacobson is to enter Dartmouth next year. Eddie Driggs, former Princeton football man, advanced to the third round over Art Fahy Los Angeles, whom he defeated 4 and 3. J. A. Ahern, Buffalo, was another winner, defeating F. Allan West Pittston, Pa., 4 and 3

Jack Westland, Walker Cup man from Chicago, then declared in the fight. He defeated C. W. Kent Richmond, Va., 2 and 1, after Kent had been 1 up at the turn. Westland squared it with a birdie 3 at the 10th, took the lead with another birdie at the 12th and clinche it with a winning 3 at the 16th.

C. A. Reckner, Philadelphia earned the distinction of being the first man in the field to survive the second round of play, the Philadelphian easily defeating S. S. Overton, Baltimore, 6 up and 5 to play Overton lost the second, third fourth and sixth holes with a series of 5's, and never recovered

GOLDMAN WINS

Another winner by large plurality was Dave Goldman, Dallas, Tex who defeated Howard Tryon, Elmira, N. Y., by 4 and 3. Goldman started with three birdies and then too kthe next two holes to be 5 up After that the round was a formality.

Close on the heels of Ouimet's elimination by unknown Bobby Jones, Detroit youngster, another unknown, C. B. Mitchell, Clement N. J., led the Jones lad one up at the turn of their match

OTHER RESULTS

Results of some other early matches were: T. A. Torrance, defeated Phillip Little, Minneapolis 2 up; J. C. Cameron, Montreal, defeated Kenneth Wolcott, Trenton 2 and 1; Ernest Peiper, Jr., eliminated W. S. Meany, Jr., 3 and 2 Albert Scotty Campbell, Seattle, defeated Perry Hall, Gulph Mills, Pa., 5 and 4.

Russell Martin, Chicago, defeated R. N. Grant, Hartford, 3 and 2 Claude Myers, Jr., Kansas City, Mo., eliminated Dave Whiteside, New Bedfrd, Mass., 2 and 1.

Another unknown eliminated veteran, Jesse Guilford, Auburndale, Mass., a former title holder, when W. F. Marks, Oakmont, Pa., scored a 1 up victory.

Frank Ford, Charleston, S. C. won a third round berth when he defeated W. E. Detweiler, Jr., victor in 1 holes, 4 up and 3

Redskins May Try It Again at Malden

By Walter Kiley

Gratified by the success of the Dilboy Field experiment which attracted close to 15,000 football followers, the Boston Redskins hope to announce another inter-Redskin game for the Pearl Street Stadium, Malden, tomorrow evening.

Unfortunately the heat and the crowd which jammed its way [illegible] into the Dilboy Field gridiron confines, prevented the players from showing to the best of advantage Sunday.

Coach Dietz is therefore anxious to see his charges in actual game conditions once more before leaving for Pittsburgh on Friday night. He must cut his squad before that time, and it is this game which will be the medium of either being kept or dropped.

Cliff Battles' Battlers have asked for the return engagement. Still smarting from the sting of a 7-6 defeat at the hands of the Ernie Pinckert Panthers, Battles requested Dietz to keep the squads intact, as they were on the Sabbath.

More than anything else, the Dilboy game showed to Boston fans a new backfield star to line up with Battles, Pinckert and Pug Rentner He is Ted Wright, colorful Texan, leading scorer two years ago, last year an ace in the Washington pro backfield

Bill Blaney, Mass. State Champ, Defeated by Coast Links Star

Bill Blaney, the state champion turned in one of his poorest rounds today and went out of the championship on the short end of a six and 5 match with J. E. French, Jr, San Francisco.

Blaney was so far off form that he used up 44 strokes to get to the turn and he wa sonly one under 5s for the four incoming holes. On the other hand, there was nothing very remarkable about the brand of golf shot by French, who was out in 39 and one over par coming in. Yet, it was good enough to prevent Blaney from winning a single hole.

At the first hole, Blaney's second caught the track but he almost holed out his third only to miss coming back and lose the hole to French who was also short chipped four feet fro mthe cup for his four.

A flubbed second shot cost Blaney the next hole and then they halved the next four holes, the 3d and 5th in one over par figures. Blaney was trapped at the [illegible] 7th with French short. The [illegible] Burn player dropped to three down when he took three putts after coming out of the hazard.

Blaney had a terrible time trying to get into the cup at the 8th where was trapped in two and out and over into another hazard in three winding up with a disastrous six to be four down

After halving the 9th and 10th Blaney got into a bad lie on his second going up the long 11th and was obliged to play a safety shot and took four to get home, with his opponent up their nicely in regulation figures, for another win.

Although he was traped from the 12th tee, Blaney got a halve when French needed three putts to get down and then match wound up on the next green, when Blaney was [illegible]

Chris Carr Pins 2 to 1 Defeat on Freddie Wright, Ex-State Champ

Just about the time that Bill Blaney was shaking hands with J. E. French on the 13th green Freddie rWight was conceding to Chris Carr, Buffalo, N. Y., [illegible] hanging a 2 to 1 defeat on him.

Like Blaney, Freddie Wright was not up to scratch today. He was out in 42 and was two over par for the eight inward holes. Wright was three down at the turn and was unable to win more than two holes coming back.

Wright started off well by winning the first hole in regulation figures, his opponent failing to get home but poor second shots at the next three holes dropped him to two down Wright pushed his pitch to the second green and failed to get his chip up close and at the ensuing hole he was trapped in two, losing both holes to par golf

Playing the 4th, Wright caught not one but two traps, the first on his drive and the second as he came out and had total six blows when he holed out to be two down, as Carr also parred this hole

After halving the 5th and 6th Wright missed a five-footter for a win at the short 7th and then Carr canned a seven-foot for a halve at the 8th. Wright's drive off the 9th tee was across the 8th fairway and in the rough from where he landed his second into the woods taking three to Carr's two to get onto the three down at the half way mark

Carr holed a putt from across the tenth green and then Wright stepped up and dropped a twelve-footer for a halve in 3s. Wright nicked Carr for a hole at the 11th by stymieing him but following an even break at the short 12th, he hooked to the edge of the woods at the 13th and took three to get with, with Carr on the bank edge of the green in two all set for another win, which he got when Wright's approach left him too far from the cup for his putt

AGAIN PLAYS IRON

After Carr had topped his drive at the 14th, the ball just getting off the tee, Wright played an iron and was home in three, with Carr still away after playing five, the Trapelo player taking the hole with a couple of strokes to spare

Having lost confidence in his wods, Wright again played an iron off the 15th tee but his drive left him too much of a second shot to get home and the best he got was a halve, despite the fact that Carr was trapped in two.

It was at the short 16th hole that Freddie Wright blew whatever chance he had of getting into the third round. He played a fine iron to the green and looked set for a win, when Carr landed in the trap but after his opponent had come out of the hazard Wright putted some four feet from the cup and as Carr was still seven feet away in three, he still had all the appearances of a Wright win, but, Freddie missed his footer and sounded his own death knell, for the best he could get at the 17th was a halve hwcih left him two down and only one hole to play

Shamrock III Ill-Fated From Start

By Associated Press

New York, Sept. 11—Shamrock III Sir Thomas Lipton's third straight unsuccessful challenger for the America's cup, had two strikes on her when she sailed against the new American defender, Reliance, in the series of 1903 and Reliance put over the deciding strike in three successive races

Lipton's newest creation was ill-fated almost from the day she was launched. In one of her trial races with Shamrock I in native waters she lost a mast and when it went overside, one man of the crew went with it and was drowned. Several others of the crew were injured.

It was an unfortunate start for the boat that was unlucky enough to encounter one of the fastest and most extreme racing machines ever turned out under the supervision of Nat Herreshoff

Shamrock III was an improvement in speed and lines over her predecessors but Reliance outmaneuvered and outsailed her by more than seven minutes in the first race. Lipton's entry gave Reliance a stiff battle in the second race and was the loser by only little more than a minute

The boats met for the last time over a 30-mile windward-leeward route. Reliance had the better of the close start and led by ten minutes at the mark-boat

A heavy blanket of fog rolled in on the back stretch and Reliance crossed the finish line diagonally while Shamrock missed it completely and her skipper didn't bother to turn her back and finish

BROWNING PREDICTS EARLY WIN OVER CHAMPION GEORGE

U. S. Yachting King Prepares at Wheel of Rainbow for Strenuous Series in America's Cup Defense Against Endeavour

Harold Vanderbilt, skipper of the yacht Rainbow, was caught in three characteristic positions at the wheel of the great Class J sloop in a trial run off Newport. Vanderbilt was putting the yacht through its paces for the coming series with T. O. M. Sopwith's Endeavour, from England, which is challenging for the America's Cup. The series opens on Saturday next and continues until one boat has won four races. The Endeavour and Sopwith are expected to provide a stirring challenge

BROWNING IS TO KEEP ON TOP OF CHAMP

By Jack Conway

Jim Browning tells me he will score two falls inside of an hour in his world [illegible] championship mat bout with Ed Don George at Fenway Park tomorrow night.

"I intend to go after George from the start of the bout," Browning said with an air of confidence. "Londos made the mistake of playing a waiting game with the champion.

"I have wrestled George four times, and defeated him twice. He won one match, while the fourth contest was a draw. I think I am stronger than Ed, and a better wrestler.

"I would make a mistake if I were to stand off and take things easy. The way to lick a champion is to keep on top of him all the time. I shall tire him out, and then toss him. I am sure I shall score two falls within an hour."

Browning looks to be in perfect condition for the bout.

"I have trained for speed," Jim told me. "This bout presents me with my big opportunity and I intend to make the most of it. I shall keep George on his heels and toss him quickly."

SPELLMAN VS. MACALUSO

Browning and George [illegible] to engage in light workouts [illegible] Ed planned to work at [illegible] ley's Gym.

George, like Browning, is in good condition. The champion realizes he has a hard match on his hands, but he feels he will come through with a smashing victory. George is anxious to prove he is the best champion since the palmy days of Frank Gotch.

The [illegible] card is the most attractive ever offered for an early season show with [illegible] Ernie Dusek in the semifinal against Casey Kazanjian.

Other bouts will be [illegible] Spellman against Len Ma[illegible] Rudy Dusek, Ernie's brother [illegible] Count Za[illegible]ff [illegible] ite, Everett Marshall vs. George Saunders, John Maimberg vs. Billy Bartush, Karl Pojello vs. Jack Costa, and Bull Martin vs. Vic Christie.

PARADE OF PLANES

Almost as attractive as the wrestling itself is the list of side features arranged by Carroll Swan. Aeroplanes will whirl in dizzy and daring stunts over head, battling with an anti aircraft battalion located in the Fenway Park outfield, the Battle of St. Mihiel, fought on September 12, will be reproduced in miniature and the championship Legion band from Norwood will do its stuff.

Another is the battle royal between five husky colored warriors wearing gloves. Bill Cunningham, unless one of the darkies knocks him over the ropes, will referee it from beginning to end.

Formation of College League Near Complete

By Associated Press

Although still [illegible] the unofficial stage a "Big Eight" of Eastern football playing colleges draws nearer and nearer to definite formation.

Tentative plans leading toward organization of a football circuit comprising the seven members of the Eastern Intercollegiate basketball and baseball leagues have been discussed for several years. Latest revisions of the plan would include Brown as well as these seven—Penn, Princeton, Yale, Harvard, Columbia, Cornell and Dartmouth.

Much remains to be done in the way of ironing out difficulties, but nevertheless a study of the football schedules of these eight schools for 1934 shows definite interlocking slates.

Yale will play no fewer than six of the others this year. Princeton, Harvard, Cornell, Columbia and Dartmouth will meet four. Penn and Brown have scheduled three games with other teams in the unofficial league.

The unwieldy number of so-called major college football teams in the east—there are 30 of them—for many years has brought suggestions of various groupings along the lines of the Western Conference, the Pacific Coast Conference and other similar organizations.

[illegible]

The renewal of athletic relations between Harvard and Princeton and the Crimson's decision to join in the eastern baseball and basketball leagues after a long interval during which Harvard frowned upon leagues of any sort furnished new impetus for organization of a football circuit built around the old "Big Three."

This plan now may be definitely carried out within the next few years, if not sooner.

YALE FOR SCHEME

Yale apparently is committed to the scheme with a 1934 schedule that calls for games with Columbia, Penn, Brown, Dartmouth, Princeton and Harvard. The only prospective league rival the Elis will miss is Cornell.

Princeton will play Cornell, Harvard, Yale and Dartmouth, and Harvard will clash with Brown, Dartmouth, Princeton and Yale.

Brown vs. Harvard, Yale and Columbia.

GIANTS DROP THIRD GAME IN ROW

It sure was a blue Monday for the world champion Giants. They dropped their third game in a row when the Pirates put over five runs in the ninth for their seventh straight victory. And the Cardinals made it three in a row over the Phils.

So now the New Yorkers' lead is only four games, and they have [illegible] three less than the second-place Mound City crew which [illegible] the Polo Grounds for a four-game series starting Thursday.

The Tigers took another fall out of the Red Sox, 2-1, and increased their American League lead to 4½ games over the Yankees, who were idle.

A pair of home runs by Hank Greenberg, giant first-sacker of the Bengals wrecked a fine pitching effort by Gordon "Dusty" Rhodes, who allowed only five hits. Eldon Auker was even more effective on the Tiger hill, letting the Harrismen down with three blows.

Jerome "Dizzy" Dean chalked up his 25th victory of the season for the Cards as he yielded the Phillies but five hits. The defeat knocked the Quakers down within one game of the cellar, occupied by the Reds, who nosed out the Dodgers.

Wally Berger's top tie with Mel Ott and Jimmy Collins in the National League home run race didn't last long. Ott gained sole possession of the peak by bashing out his 33rd circuit drive against the Pirates.

Hughie Critz and Gus Mancuso also hit for the circuit for the Giants to no avail.

Cleveland passed up a chance to increase its third-place lead over the Red Sox when it fell before the Athletics, 9 to 6. A rookie named Castor, recently discovered on the West Coast by Connie Mack, tamed the Indians.

BRANDT SEEKS 15TH VICTORY OF SEASON

By Joe Cashman

The Braves resume their desperate struggle to retain their hold on fourth place in the third game of the series with the Chicago Cubs this afternoon.

One short week ago the Warriors appeared to have the berth cinched with a five-game lead over the Pittsburgh Pirates, but today finds the Buccs trailing by only two games and on the crest of an inspired seven-game victory streak.

The result of this battle for the lowest money spot promises to remain in doubt until the closing week of the campaign but the happenings of the next two afternoons should go a long way towards settling the issue.

Unless the Warriors have strengthened their hold by tomorrow evening, when they will have finished with the Cubs and the Pirates will have completed their engagement with the Giants, the natives' chances of sharing in the World Series melon won't be particularly bright.

For they can't hope to do more than hold their own while they're engaged with the Reds and the Pirates are facing Brooklyn later in the week, and they figure to lose some ground next week when they tackle the Cards as the Buccs are playing the Phils.

Ed "Lefty" Brandt will go after his 15th victory of the season this p. m. Manager Bill McKechnie has announced. He will be opposed by Bill Lee, one of the prize rookie right-handers of the year.

At the same time the Tribal pilot makes public the glad tidings that "Buck" Jordan and Les Mallon, who have been out two weeks with injuries, are about ready to play again and that if they don't get back into the lineup today, they'll be in there before the end of the week.

Mr. Boston Says:—

Another Bobby Jones Story of Youth

Browning Confident

By Jack Conway

I WATCHED youthful Bobby Jones of Detroit tee off in his match with Francis Ouimet at The Country Club.

"This kid Jones doesn't seem to have any nerves," I remarked to Bill Grimes, golf editor of this newspaper. "What kind of a golfer is he?"

Mr. Boston

"Don't be surprised if he beats Ouimet," replied Grimes. "The kid certainly has plenty of nerve to enter this tournament under the name Bobby Jones. It really is his right name, but I think if my name happened to be Bobby Jones I would enter as Jake Jones so that nobody would expect me to play like Bobby of Atlanta."

I saw Bobby Jones of Atlanta talking with Jesse Sweetser. The veteran displayed more than usual interest in the playing of young Mister Bobby Jones of Detroit.

I followed the Ouimet-Jones match and wish to go on record as saying the victory of the Detroit youngster was clean cut. He hasn't got a nerve in his body. He did his best playing in the tight spots when a miscue would have meant defeat.

Jones wasn't the least bit upset over the fact he was playing against the great Ouimet. He probably argued he had everything to win and very little to lose. This is the spirit which enables youthful challengers to topple champions from their thrones.

Ouimet carried a tremendous mental burden into the title tourney. He has been on the golfing heights for years, and was picked to make a strong bid for the championship this year.

It was naturally expected Ouimet would win. This all tended to tighten up his play, and may have been responsible for the poor putting which caused his downfall.

Crosscup-Pishon Show

I HURRIED from The Country Club to attend a luncheon held by the Crosscup-Pishon Post of the American Legion. This organization is sponsoring the world championship wrestling bout between Ed Don George and Jim Browning at Fenway Park tomorrow night.

Jim Browning was the guest of honor. Ed Don George was also invited to attend the affair but refused when told Browning would be present.

The committee in charge of the show reported a tremendous ticket sale. It is expected that one of the largest crowds ever to attend a mat contest in this city will be on hand when George and Browning enter the ring.

Johnny Risko Here

"I think I shall have to get myself a tavern," Risko told Sharkey. "It is easier to get money this way than by taking punches on the chin."

Sharkey told Risko he was still getting action by refereeing wrestling contests. Sharkey invited Risko and his wife to be his guests at Mechanics Building tonight where he will referee a Battle Royal.

FINAL PLANS FOR BIG RACE

By Montagu Worthley

International News Service Sports Writer

Newport, R. I., Sept. 11 (INS)—The lull that precedes the rush is apparent here today. Endeavour and Rainbow are expected to proceed to Bristol tonight for that final burnishing of bronze underbodies, and last-minute preparations, before the America's cup races start next Saturday.

Today there are but few yachts in the harbor, or even over in Brenton's cove, but by tomorrow all sorts of sail and power yachts will begin to arrive, and by Friday night every available berth will be occupied.

GREAT RECEPTION PLANNED

Society is planning a great party for Thursday with the guest of honor being Mr. and Mrs. T. O. M. Sopwith of Endeavour, and the afterguard of [illegible] Harold S. Vanderbilt and the afterguard of Rainbow as well as the [illegible] skippers and afterguards of Yankee, Weetamoe and Vanitie. [illegible] Walker is expected [illegible] tomorrow with His Majesty's [illegible] along with [illegible] Rear Admiral Hayne [illegible] U. S. S. Arkansas [illegible] the affair.

PRESIDENT TO WITNESS FIRST

Assistant Secretary of the Navy Henry L. Roosevelt, will be aboard the U. S. S. Arkansas, and President Roosevelt is expected to witness at least the first race from aboard Vincent Astor's big yacht, Nourmahal. Whether he remains for more than one race depends upon the outcome of the first. It is said, he will not leave Nourmahal while off here.

Many of the summer cottagers are arranging for all sorts of dinners and other functions for the yachtsmen and other notables, who are expected to be here by the latter part of this week and, already the few hotels here are hanging out signs indicating "all accommodations taken."

BOTH TAKE TRIAL SPIN

Endeavour went out for a sail yesterday afternoon and instead of coming back to her mooring in Brenton Cove continued up to Bristol to be in readiness for her haul-out, while the Rainbow went out for a brief spin in the bay and then returned to her mooring.

PLAYING ON IS WILSON'S BEST BET AT ROCKINGHAM

TRACKER HAS BACKING IN FIRST RACE

By Dave Wilson

Selections Made for a Fast Track Best Bet—Playing On

Rockingham Park, Sept. 11—Playing On, a consistent performer from the Doris Melanson Stable, stands out so well on past performances in the five and one-half furlongs of the second number, that I must rate her the outstanding hazard on a well-matched card here this afternoon.

The four-year-old daughter of Sweep On and Playing High is descending the scale and will be opposed by a small field of only mediocre platers. Her best effort is all that is needed in order to earn brackets.

Playing On was evidently a bit over her head in her last two races. In both of them she finished third behind Moane Keala and Cantersine. However, in a previous race she led home Par Value, Her Gold and others over the six furlong route.

FIRST RACE

Tracker, Wedidit, Cooney

TRACKER matched the highly regarded Chancery stride for stride until a few yards from the wire in his last outing at Narragansett. The Whitney juvenile was unable to drub Chancery, but he was easily the master of the others. WEDIDIT is trained by Jack Howard and will bear watching. Before shipping from Hawthorne he won a cheap maiden affair, only to be disqualified. COONEY was unable to cope with the top one in their Pawtucket meeting, but he has raced well enough since then to be accorded the next best chance.

SECOND RACE

Playing On, Cash Surrender, Eldee

PLAYING ON has only to run back to any one of his good races in this sector in order to enter the winner's circle. CASH SURRENDER displayed startling improvement in his last outing to place to Dornoch. Off that effort the spic and span gelding looms as the main danger. ELDEE finished close up in his initial outing over this course and is entitled to some consideration.

THIRD RACE

Vacillate, Lamporte, Liberty Oak

VACILLATE raced six furlongs in 1:14 over a sloppy track to win pulled up in her last outing. The opposition is that affair was about the same as this. The Volta mare is as well suited on a fast track as in the mud so I can see no reason why she should not repeat. LAMPORTE failed to run his usual race last time and that effort may be disregarded. On 'Gansett dope the Reichert color-bearer figures all dangerous. LIBERTY OAK won his last start and should hold the others safe.

FOURTH RACE

Chain, Hernando, Decorate

CHAIN was a bit over his head in his debut at this meeting and that effort may be disregarded. In a previous outing at Narragansett he displayed an excellent turn of speed to lead Vacillate and others under the wire. HERNANDO was a winner of his last two races at Narragansett and figures to offer the sterner contention. DECORATE displayed a nice effort in the mud last out and should save the short end.

FIFTH RACE

Albuquerque, Cloud Sweeper, Surveyor

ALBUQUERQUE will be racing over a distance made to order for him. The Greenock colt set a blistering pace in the six furlongs of the Maplewood on opening day and was not headed until within a few yards of the wire. CLOUD SWEEPER has evidently found her true stride. The High Cloud miss drubbed a shifty field with ease in her New England debut. May happen that she will turn out to be a topnotcher. SURVEYOR is in under a feather. The Whitneyite displayed considerable improvement in his last and should not be far away from a winning effort.

SIXTH RACE

Piety, Hickory Lad, Red Jug

PIETY is back among her own kind. The A. A. Baroni-owned thoroughbred has been chasing high grade platers and stake horses in this sector and had scant chance to show her true worth. The pennant filly received a tightner in a six-furlong race last week and should be right on edge. HICKORY LAD'S last race was an excellent one despite the fact that there wasn't a whole lot in back of him. RED JUG drubbed some fair ones on opening day.

SEVENTH RACE

Old Judge, Santerno, Harky

OLD JUDGE'S best races are in the mud, but he has shown enough over a dry strip to be rated over this field. SANTERNO is picking up considerable weight off his last win, but that should not stop him from saving the place. HARKY is dropping down and is entitled to some consideration.

King Don Tries Acers' Test

Sam Velardi of Waverly shows Ed George how he holds the club for Ace efforts. Sam knows. His best shot at Franklin Park stopped two feet from the cup, one of the finest shots of the Ace tourney. (Pictures by Boston Evening American Staff Photographer.)

FROLIC CHOICE IN FIRST RACE AT FAIR

By Ed Cogswell

Brockton Fair Grounds, Sept. 11—With the baby trotters holding the center of the racing stage here today, the two-year-olds and the three-year-olds getting into action right after the noon hour, and with the addition of the 2:15 class pacers, a card that will attract attention from the big crowds in the grandstand and quarter stretch has been arranged.

Frolic, owned by the veteran sportsman George A. Graves, of [illegible], is the pick of the talent for the three-year-olds. This filly has raced well all season. She was one of the [illegible] of the Rockingham meeting, pulling down two firsts, often at very long odds for the pari-mutuel players.

Her opposition will come from J. C. Thompson's entry, Pastime, from New York city, and Queen [illegible], Sterns and Morin's nomination, from Plattsburg, N. Y., the daughter of [illegible] Worthy, Queen [illegible]. Following are the starters in this race.

On form the 2:15 pace should go to H. Kay Worthy, the property of George R. Ford, Windsor, Ct. This chap has been a bearcat over the half-mile tracks by taking into camp all and sundry he has gone against and in fast time. The fight for second money should be between Miss Ontario, Worthy Peter and Plucky Scot. The starters are:

The two-year-old trot is a guessing match as to the better of the five entered. There is a tip out that Lena Noo, from Lincroft, N. J., has been showing a lot of speed in her work, and the same could be said of Chuck Hanover, which is sure to get a good drive from A. Rodney. Those taking the word follow.

There was joy among the horsemen having entries in the events in which Paul Bowser had named his champions to take the word when it was discovered that the Bowser horses were withdrawn from the Brockton races. He has decided to race a few of the string over New York half-mile tracks this week, and the remainder of the string being shipped to Lexington, Ky., to lay over for the Grand Circuit meeting there.

His action is all the better for the public, also for the means the staging of some red hot racing for the big end of the purses that Bowser's horses would have walked off with easily.

In only one of the three events on yesterday's program was there keen opposition to the winners, the 2:13 trot.

Bandit had just enough to head the bunch in the two first heats, and in the final trip was obliged to finish fourth, Calumet Doble grabbing off the honors by a short head from Expectation. In fact the first four trotters finished within a neck of each other.

Lil Barrent made it straight heats for the 2:14 trot, and the same was true of Johnny Walker in the 2:19 pace.

GEORGE SHOOTS HOLE-IN-ONE, INTO BAY

By Sully Kozol

"I'm a wrestler not a golfer," bellowed Ed Don George as he swung lustily at one of the tiny white pellets out at the Boston American Hole-In-One tournament at Franklin Park.

And when we saw the king of the grunt-groaners [illegible] we [illegible] that upon taking his first cut at the agate George's [illegible] her [illegible] that [illegible] himself it wasn't broke into shreds like [illegible] straw from the force of his [illegible] swing.

The ball sailed high over the 125-yard special Hole-In-One and for all the caddies knew, it must have settled somewhere out in the bay near Castle Island.

To date almost a thousand entrants have stepped up to the tee to try for one of the many valuable prizes being offered by the Boston American in its third annual Hole-In-One-Contest.

Samuel Velardi, a 16-year-old caddy from the Belmont Spring Country Club [illegible] a high beauty that settled just two feet in front of the cup. This puts him in second place with mail clerk Dennis Sullivan still holding the lead with his shot that came 1 foot, 1½ inches from the cup.

The contest is open to anyone who cares to enter regardless of residential districts, age or sex. The only requirement is that the entrant bring along his own clubs and five balls.

In surveying the automobile industry at this time of year the trend of sales and production must play a secondary part. For the leading role rightfully belongs to dealer stocks. Unless the outlook is sufficiently reassuring to convince manufacturers that dealer stocks will be well liquidated by the end of the year, a feeling of pessimism is likely to sweep over the industry when it contemplates sales possibilities for the following year. The reason is not hard to understand. New models are being made ready at present and field reports that dealers will be well liquidated by November augurs well for production early in 1935.

Following the failure of the 90-91 area to hold prices started down toward the next resistance level at 87-89. Before probing the real strength of the latter zone it is likely that prices may rally in a half hearted manner. Those who fear to stay long pending a test of underlying market conditions may use such a price lift to lighten up. The alternative is to wait for the test and then, should the worst happen and prices slide on down under 87, sell out on a stop loss order placed just under the lower limit.

Although control measures seem to be aiding current petroleum prices, there is no denying that seasonal influences will shortly make themselves felt. Some decline in profits is naturally to be expected, even though generally favorably operating conditions may be anticipated over the balance of the year. As a consequence, a cautious view of oil shares and their possibilities over the winter months seems justified and advantageous switches to other shares should be considered.

Orthodox Financing Method Questioned

Though actions speak louder than wor[illegible] orthodox method of the administration's Sept[illegible] October refunding was not accepted yesterday by bankers and bond men as evidence of con[illegible] intentions.

Success Forced by Bankers' Fears?

How much of the Fourth Liberty called 4¼s are in the hands of [illegible] revealed by [illegible] Treasury financing.

Much of the buying came [illegible] institutions because the [illegible] bonds immediately took on the aspect of a short maturity [illegible] directly by [illegible]

Much of the groundwork for the [illegible] was laid by more [illegible] the banks have [illegible] to bear any longer the burden of financing the government.

The fear of inflation, because of fear that the administration did not mean what it was saying, was the other factor in the depressed markets of the six weeks preceding yesterday's offering.

Bankers know that if they do not make this offering a success they are giving a further impulse to currency inflation. If they actually fear inflation, it was remarked in brokerage circles, they will accept the exchange offered them. Interest yesterday from this source was said to have been largely in favor of the four-year 2s. Exchange of two-year 1½ per cent notes for the ½ per cent certificates maturing September 15 was expected to be routine.

By LEWIS HANEY
Professor of Economics, New York University

Industrial activity a week ago [illegible] a fact demonstrated by statistics. This is [illegible] occurred before the textile strike had become effective, and in spite of some spurt in textile production in anticipation of the walkout.

All reliable [illegible] curves are now [illegible] December 1933 [illegible] September [illegible] industrial activity [illegible] already [illegible] 1932 [illegible]

Thus we have to admit that the experiment of "priming the pump" has failed. The business pump is evidently not primed.

It is notable, however, that although government expenditures for [illegible] and doing [illegible] increasing purchasing power [illegible] we still find [illegible] measures. Those who are [illegible] their hopes [illegible] government spending [illegible]

It seems to me that if we keep [illegible] priming the poor old [illegible] pump much longer, we may wear [illegible] out [illegible] exhaust the [illegible] which is government [illegible]

Briefly the facts are that steel [illegible] last week [illegible] something like 18 per cent of capacity [illegible] 10 per cent. This was the [illegible] since the bank crash of March, 1933. Trade reports indicate no signs of recovery in steel demand as the chief consuming industries are flat [illegible] scrap [illegible] turned down. Most large steel buyers seem to be expecting price concessions.

Retail trade, though affected by bad weather in [illegible] seems to have been fair [illegible] good in parts of the west and south, particularly in the southwest, where government funds are being distributed. On the Pacific coast, the recovery from the long shoremen's strike and large shipments of citrus fruit, as well as a large salmon pack, are helping. In the east, retail business [illegible] so good and the textile strike will probably retard it.

Commodity prices reacted a little last week. Grains and textile products were higher, but metals were lower and hogs, meat and dairy products slumped. Lead, zinc and southern pine lumber touched the lowest levels of the year.

Wool Trading Is Found Extremely Quiet in Boston

Even the small amount of trading that has characterized activity in the Boston wool market for many weeks has been further curtailed in the past week by the strike in several branches of the textile industry. When [illegible] of the woolen and worsted mills have been closed as a result of the strike, many of the manufacturers that were still [illegible] and had [illegible] buying small quantities [illegible] withdrew entirely from the wool market during the past week. Most wool buyers were inclined to remain out of the market while the labor situation [illegible]

All grades of [illegible] and [illegible] woods were quiet. Small quantities of [illegible] reported to have been taken by a few woolen manufacturers [illegible] was insignificant. Some small [illegible] were reported on [illegible] twelve months Texas wools offered direct from the country at [illegible] the range 56-60c scoured [illegible]

SHARES RECORD SMALL GAINS IN DULLNESS

New York, Sept. 11—The stock market made another effort to regain its composure today, meeting with only moderate success, however.

Opening irregularly lower, the list showed signs of firming during subsequent dealings, but the recoveries were small and the list showed no particular disposition to stage a vigorous advance. Such gains as were scored, appeared to be due as much to short covering as to any aggressive long buying.

METALS RECOVER

United States Smelting was again a volatile performer dropping below 110 for a loss of 3 points and then quickly recovering to around its previous close. Other metal shares, including Alaska Juneau, Howe Sound, Cerro de Pasco and American Smelting moved in comparatively narrow ranges to hold near their previous closing levels.

Both General Motors and Chrysler reflected a better grade of support and even managed to get fractionally above yesterday's finish. Other motor shares, though, were negative.

United States Steel duplicated its year's low and then rallied slightly. Bethlehem, Republic, as well as other shares in the group, were sluggish.

In the industrial group, prices showed no material change as American Can lost half a point.

LOANS INCREASE

A sharp increase in commercial loans, as shown in the weekly Federal Reserve member bank condition statement, dividend attention in the financial district, with the results of the Maine election and developments in the textile strike.

"All other," or commercial loans, of the reporting banks in 91 cities increased $114,000,000, the largest gain in that item in a long time. The condition statement also revealed a decline of $89,000,000 in holdings of U. S. government securities and a further increase of $60,000,000 in "other securities."

The rise in "all other" loans was accepted as additional evidence of credit expansion tendencies.

Reports of a ready response to the Treasury's conversion offer in its $1,775,000,000 refunding program cheered bond men.

The government's estimate of the smallest corn crop since 1881 did not surprise the financial community, for an extraordinarily small crop had been anticipated as a result of the drouth in the Middle-West this summer.

COMMERCIAL LOANS UP

A sharp increase in "all other," or commercial, loans and a shifting from government into "other" securities characterized the weekly condition statement of reporting member banks in 91 leading cities on September 5.

"All other" loans were up $114,000,000, the largest gain in some time, to $4,669,000,000, or $230,000,000 above the low on July 8. Gain by member banks in New York district was $86,000,000 in the September 5 week.

A decline of $89,000,000 was reported in holdings of U. S. governments by all reporting members, of which $45,000,000 took place in New York district. In contrast, the banks showed an increase of $60,000,000 in other securities, of which $23,000,000 took place in New York district.

Atlantic Coast Line Asks Listings

Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co. filed application with the Baltimore Stock Exchange for restoration to the list $81,342,700 common stock, par value $100, and $51,326,000 first consolidated mortgage 4 per cent bonds, Theodore Gould, secretary of the local exchange, announced.

Upon admission to the list of these securities, practically all securities of Atlantic Coast Line Co. will be entitled to temporary registration under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

C. & O. Loadings Decrease in Week

Loadings on Chesapeake & Ohio's own lines in week ended September 8 were 10½ percent below the like week of 1933, against a decrease of 10.4 percent in the preceding week.

London, Sept. 11 (AP)—Bar gold declined 8 pence, to 140 s. 3 1-2 d., (U. S. equivalent $35.08 on basis of sterling opening at $5.00 1-8).

Fall Outlook Good for Plumbing Trade

In contrast to the predominance of orders from industrial centers during the first six months of the current year, sales of plumbing supplies now have turned strongly upward in the home and apartment house divisions.

Supplementing the funds distributed by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the money now being provided by the National Housing Act is giving the strongest impetus to the movement of equipment into residences that has been in evidence since 1930. For, in the modernization of any house, it is the bathroom and kitchen which are given first consideration.

No matter how antiquated the remainder of the house may be, with these two rooms resplendent with the new fixtures and equipment, which today exceed in beauty and durability anything manufacturers ever have produced, the home may be termed modern and its salability is enhanced by a wide percentage.

This probably accounts for the fact that fully 60 to 80 per cent of the money now being received on loans from the NHA are going directly into this equipment.

Without this new sales outlet, which did not become of significant importance until the latter part of August, wholesale distribution of plumbing supplies during the first seven months of the year reached a dollar volume ranging from 25 to 40 per cent larger than that in the corresponding period of 1933.

WESTERN RAIL REVENUES UP

In contrast with the tenor of reports of leading railroads in other areas, the principal rail carriers, operating in the Pacific Coast and Rocky Mountain states, according to current reports, show increases in gross revenues over last year, the Bank of America, N.T.S.A., announces in its weekly comment on Far Western business.

Four transcontinental carriers, serving California, it is stated, aggregate increases of 10.5 per cent in gross revenue and 8 per cent in net operating income for the late summer business over a comparable period last year. These lines, the Southern Pacific, Union Pacific, Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, and Western Pacific, it is stated, form one of the few consequential groups of roads to escape declining revenues.

In the Pacific Northwest, the Great Northern, Northern Pacific and Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, together with the Union Pacific, managed to show a gain of .03 per cent in gross operating revenue in comparison with a decline of 5.4 per cent for fifty-eight leading roads.

Agents of the Denver & Rio Grande Western, from Denver west, report increased loadings in current operation and state that shippers are looking for further increases over the next thirty to sixty days.

Report Improvement in British Cutlery

A notable revival of the British cutlery industry has occurred since the beginning of the year, according to information received from Consul Henry S. Waterman, Sheffield, and made public by the Department of Commerce.

This revival, he points out, followed the general let-down in January and as been maintained throughout subsequent months. During April, leading Sheffield firms reported their turnover as the largest in several years and nearly double that of the corresponding period of 1933.

One of the most optimistic branches of the British cutlery industry, Consul Waterman states, is the scissors trade, which is being kept full employed. This business is chiefly due to catering for the cheaper trades. Sheffield is now supplying the sixpenny bazaars of Great Britain with scissors and pocket knives such as were formerly imported from Germany.

The output of safety razor blades continues to increase since several new firms of makers have entered the trade. Increased output and keen competition is reported making for price-cutting, and it is feared locally that this expansion may be overdone.

Exports of cutlery products from Great Britain during the second quarter of the year were valued at £224,154, an increase of 30 per cent over the corresponding period of 1933 and 12 per cent compared with the first quarter of 1934. Exports to several countries, particularly Denmark and Norway, have been increasing for several months, and are outstanding features of the present improved export situation.

Steel Shipments Increase

Shipments of finished steel products by United States Steel Corp. in August increased 8085 tons to 378,023 tons compared with 369,938 tons in July. Shipments in August, 1933, were 668,155 tons; in August, 1932, 291,688 tons and in August, 1931, 573,372 tons.

For eight months ended August 31, 1934, shipments totaled 4,426,856 tons, against 3,581,897 in the first eight months of 1933.

Bigelow-Sanford Gets Orders

Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Co. has been running three shifts of late for the production of a new line of inlaid carpets and rugs which has caught the favor of hotel managers and is also being used for store and office floors. Good orders are said to have followed the showing of this line at the recent floor coverings opening in New York.

Other departments of the mill are down to three and four days a week because of large accumulated stocks. Shipments have been off for the last two weeks, largely owing to the strike situation.

STORE SALES ARE LOWER

In August, department store sales in New England made an unfavorable showing with a year ago, which may be explained in part by the fact that the heavy buying of goods in anticipation of higher prices under the New Deal reached its peak in August, 1933, with store sales gaining 16.1 per cent over the year before. Last month there was a decline of 3.9 per cent from last year, which compared with a decline of 2.1 per cent in July and an increase of 7 per cent in June. For the first eight months of this year sales in New England were 9 per cent ahead of the same period last year.

Vermont stores made the best showing last month, with an increase of 21.2 per cent, while New Hampshire had an increase of 8.4 per cent and Maine a negligible gain of .2 per cent. Connecticut was off 1.2 per cent, Massachusetts 4.2 per cent and Rhode Island 5.4 per cent.

Following table gives percentage changes in department store sales (as computed by Federal Reserve Bank of Boston) in New England states in August and first eight months of this year, as compared with a year ago:

	August	8 Months
Connecticut stores	— 1.2%	+ 9.4%
Maine stores	— 0.2	+ 6.9
Massachusetts stores	— 4.2	+ 9.8
N. Hampshire stores	+ 8.4	+ 38.5
Rhode Island stores	— 5.4	+ 2.9
Vermont stores	+ 21.2	+ 20.8
All New England	— 3.9	+ 9.0

Gross Earnings of Canadian Pacific

Gross traffic receipts of Canadian Pacific Railway for week ending September 7 totaled $2,751,000, against $2,377,000 in corresponding week of last year, an increase of $374,000.

Goodyear Pays Regular in Canada

Goodyear Tire & Rubber of Canada declared regular quarterly dividend of $1.25 on the common, payable October 1 to stock of record September 15.

YO HO! RIPLEY!

(Sonora, Calif., Banner)

Mrs. Judkins, of Washington, D. C., is spending a week or so at Long Barn. She is a very bright, up-to-date lady, and uses no makeup, either on cheeks, lips or fingernails, so girls, take a hint from this and be ready to be just your natural selves, for that is going to be the latest style from New York.

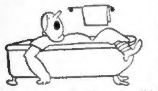
Q. and A. DEPARTMENT

Dear Aunt Bella:

I am perplexed. I dearly love a man who wishes to marry me. But if I marry again it automatically releases my last husband from any more alimony payments. What would you do in such a case? Disturbed.

Ans.—All I can say, dearie (heh! heh!), is that if you're blessed with alimony you're worth your wait in gold. Git it? Aunt ("Sly One") Bella.



"Trouble with reform in this country," sighs Genevieve, the kitchen cynic, "is that it's always backed by the right element and the wrong people."

And gals who have heard tell
Of feminine wiles

AND SO IT GOES

(Official Statement)

And Moronia, the office minx, nudges that a corn on the cob is worth two on the toe.

Gals who've built up a Southern drawl

Add Similes—

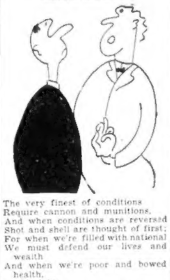
WHY WE BEHAVE LIKE HUMAN BEINGS



The very finest of conditions
Require cannon and munitions,
And when conditions are reversed
Shot and shell are thought of first;
For when we're filled with national
We must defend our lives and wealth
And when we're poor and bowed health, with debts
We must be armed against all threats. Undsowas.

OUR DAILY HEARTBREAK

(Personal—Sat'd'y Review of Literature.)

IMPOVERISHED but optimistic Wall Street orphan, 30, personable, traveled and, at time of going to press, still poesessed of a clean shirt, seeks contact with a person or persons sufficiently venturesome to offer him a livelihood: adoption no objection. "Cantab."

Adam Scofflaw's Djournal

This night home in fleysome mood, but hold my tongue, and bid my dove mix me a fine herb poultice, which she did do, and laye it on my brow, and the poultice cause me to dulce and drowse until all cangle and cankert and glourglunch have, by the magick of the poultice, been drawn out and uprooted so that I am as calm as a kitten, for which Heaven be praised.

* * *

FAMOUS LAST WORDS

No Reds Need Apply in Labor's Troubles

WHATEVER the outcome of the textile strike one thing is certain—the Communists will do their best to "chisel in" on it in order to prevent an early and fair settlement.

Communism has no interest in American labor as such.

It would cheerfully see every worker in the country out of a job and starving, as a step toward the "revolution" on which it is bent.

Its sole plan of campaign is to make trouble—trouble not only for capital but for everybody.

That, in the belief of its adherents, is the most effective way to promote the growth of Communism in this country.

To stir up strife, to prolong strife, to increase human misery is their strategy.

AMERICAN labor has the good-will of most people chiefly because most people are "labor" of one sort or another, and also because most laborers are "people."

American labor as a whole has no use for Communism.

In conducting this strike, therefore, it should, and we think will, heed the sound counsel of President Green, of the A. F. of L., to bar Communists from its ranks and not to alienate public sentiment by admitting them.

The Reds merely want to keep legitimate workers out of jobs as long as possible.

Their system is simple and it would take a very simple person not to see through it.

But, fortunately for himself and for his country, the American worker is hardly as simple as the Moscow-directed agitators over here seem to believe.

He has handled his own affairs in the past without interference from abroad, and he is not likely to tolerate interference from abroad in handling them now.

Suspend Judgment

THE burning of the steamship Morro Castle was a major catastrophe among the tragedies of the sea.

Until official investigation has sifted the facts from the rumors and the conjectures, judgment as to causes and culpability should be suspended.

One thing in the first reports that shocked the public mind was the asserted number of members of the crew who came ashore in lifeboats while passengers went to a horrible death in the blazing ship.

It will be for the Federal authorities to determine whether or not a different story might and should have been told.

How nearly the alternative describes fairly the wreck of the Morro Castle is not for us to say—but it surely is for the Government to ascertain.

At this hour, the thoughts uppermost in the public mind are thoughts of sorrow and sympathy and horror—sorrow and sympathy for the dead and their bereaved, and horror over the gruesomeness of their deaths.

The Vestris wreck, which this ship burning recalls, led to maritime reforms to make sea travel safer.

The loss of the Morro Castle must be relentlessly examined, in order—if possible or necessary—that the same end may result.

Bandit's Best Friend

That best friend of the bandit and worst foe of the policeman—the submachine gun—got into action again last week.

Half a dozen gangsters looted a bank in North Bergen, N. J., of $25,000 and made off, turning one of their "Tommies" on a car which pursued.

The pursuit stopped.

These guns, it appears, are of the same type as those used in Brooklyn recently by the crooks who took half a million dollars from an armored truck, by John Dillinger in his spectacular raids on Middle Western banks, by Baby Face Nelson, Pretty Boy Floyd, and other celebrities in the world of crime.

They are still on the market, $375 retail, $175 wholesale, available to anybody with the money, in lots of fifty if wanted.

The police don't have many.

They are permitted to shoot it out with rifles or revolvers against weapons firing 125 rounds a minute—and then people throughout the land ask:

"Why can't the cops cope with crime?"

Horror on Highways

With horror, the world read of death in a hell of raging flames that ended the lives of more than 100 persons returning from Cuba on the Morro Castle.

Probably comparatively few read the report by Registrar of Motor Vehicles Morgan T. Ryan that 37 persons were killed on the streets and highways of this commonwealth last week.

And of those who read that report, how many realized its awful significance?

If this mad slaughter by speed-crazed and drunken drivers should continue at the same rate for a year, 1924 persons would die suddenly and violently.

It is hard to say which is the more terrible, an occasional holocaust of death as in the burning of the Morro Castle or the grim toll of weekly slaughter on the public highways.

Rewarding Good Work

That this is more than a provincial superlative—a home town brag—is amply substantiated by such clever police efficiency as the solution of the Needham Trust Company outrage and the consequent conviction of the Millens and Abe Faber.

Outstanding in this case—and in many another—was the work of John F. Stokes and Michael J. Barrett. And it is therefore encouraging to learn that both of them have been suitably rewarded.

Barrett, who has been acting head of the state detectives since the death of Captain Thomas Bligh, has been named to the newly created post of State Police instructor, and Stokes is to succeed him as captain of detectives.

Promotions based on merit—as in this case—are the best way of keeping a police force at the highest possible pitch of effectiveness.,

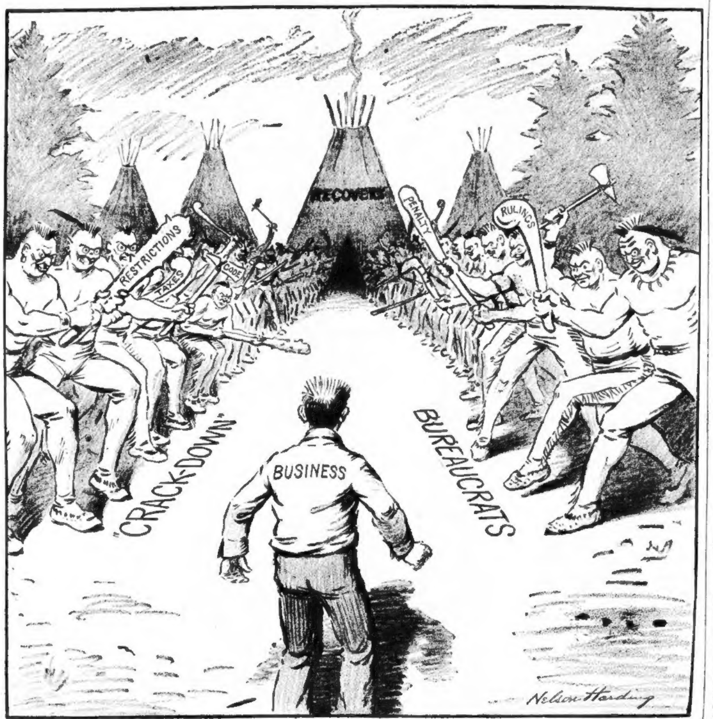
'Run the Gauntlet?'

By Neh
Hardi



Away back in Colonial days those simple minded children of Nature, the American Indians, had a pleasant custom of making a prisoner run the gauntlet. Armed with war clubs, tomahawks and other weapons, the savages formed a lane to the council lodge and invited the captive to run for it.

This arrangement made a pretty vista for the victim to face, for once he reached the lodge, he was quite safe; and now our Bureaucrats, armed with fearsome "crack-down" policies, urge their captive, Business, to start for their Recovery lodge, and wonder why he hesitates!

Listen, World! -:- By Elsie Robinson

Elsie Robinson

Often when times have been tough during these last years I think of that story they tell about Gertrude Ederle when she swam the English Channel.

She was, as you know, the first woman ever to conquer those tricky waters. But she wanted to do more than that—she wanted to beat the record established by men.

Could she—a 19-year-old girl, still lacking her full, mature strength—perform such a physical feat?

There ahead of her loomed the blur that was England. And—perhaps—fame! How many swinging strokes of the young, brown arms, how many drives of the powerful young legs through the churning waters would it take to reach that blur? How deep would she have to breathe—how fast—how long?

Like an iron band the anxious questions began binding her brain. Like quicksand the sense of hurrying tension began tugging at her body. Imperceptibly, her pace slackened. Slowly, terribly, the wall of water seemed to rise before her, shoving her back—

Then, suddenly, her trained intelligence took charge. She—by her own anxiety—was building that wall between herself and success. By her own worried calculations, she was weighing down her body, wasting her strength. There should be no more waste—no more worry! And so—

SHE QUIT LOOKING—AND SWAM.

Deliberately she stopped doing EVERYTHING but the one thing it was needful to do—SWIM. How far away was land? How much longer would it take? Would she break the record and, if so, by how much? There was only one way to answer those questions—and she took it. She stopped looking, stopped wondering, stopped fearing — AND SWAM.

Many a time when the going was tough I've remembered, and been glad for, Gertrude Ederle. For who knows where any of us are going these days, or when we'll get there?"

"How long will this job last?"

"Will my health hold out?"

"What are people thinking of me?"

"Am I getting as good a deal as I deserve?"

"Is someone doing me dirt?"

"How about that blunder I made yesterday?"

"How about that job I've got to tackle tomorrow?"

"Suppose I don't make the grade—then what will happen?"

NAGGING QUESTIONS

Questions like these, and a million more, are nagging all of us—thickening in an iron band about our tired brains—tugging like quicksand at our discouraged hearts. The trail ahead grows blurred. Our speed slackens. We feel ourselves grow weak.

STOP IT!

Stop looking—and swim!

There's a time for sensible anxiety and proper calculation—but that time has passed. Now you're in the thick of the battle and there's just one thing to do—

STOP LOOKING — AND SWIM!

Forget the other fellow. Forget yourself. Forget the past and the future. There's one thing and one thing only that will determine your destiny now. And that's YOUR PRESENT PERFORMANCE.

You've got a certain distance to go. And there's just one thing in the world that will cover that distance for you, and that's—YOUR OWN FIGHTING STROKE. Your own steady, plucky, plugging on the job.

Plain advice? Maybe—but believe me, plenty powerful! And badly needed by about 121,000,000 in these United States.

For we're all in an endurance drive. Some of us are going to win out. Who? It won't be the lads who waste themselves on prophecies or promies, frets or fancies, theories or threats. It will be the lads who have the sense and the gumption to quit worrying and stop looking—AND SWIM!

Respect for Law -:- By Winifred Black

Winifred Black

He shot a policeman the other day—the burglar who was trying to escape. Not a serious wound, mind you; just a little surface affair in the flesh of the arm. But he shot a policeman, and that policeman was not an American cop; he was an English bobby. And that seems to make an amazing amount of difference.

The whole of England read the news over the morning cup of tea, an every man in England who could read gasped with horror.

What! Shoot a bobby? Who ever heard of such a thing?

No, it wasn't Jim O'Shaughnessy, or Pat Maloney, or whatever his name might be, that mattered so much. The man who did that shooting shot England close to the heart—and all England rose in pursuit of the outrageous criminal.

SPEEDY JUSTICE

Scotland Yard was up in arms. The village constabulary rose and every man jack in the ripe little tight little island who had a horse to ride or a car to pilot was off in hot pursuit.

What! Attack an officer of the law and get away with it? Not if England knew it.

And England did know it. And in a very few hours the man who shot the bobby was trapped. Then there was just one thing left for him to do, and he did it.

He killed himself, and "jolly well out of it," as they say on the Strand.

A man who merely raises his open hand and resists an officer of the law in England has his trouble cut out for him before he's a minute older. But to assault a bobby with a deadly weapon? It isn't done! It really isn't, don't you know?

That's the sentiment; let's not try to deny it.

Where did he get the gun? Who sold it to him? How did he dare to carry it? Pouf! Don't talk nonsense.

Be yourself! What do you think we are—lot of kids to look up to a man just because he's wearing a certain kind of uniform?

I'll say not!

Who is he, anyhow, when you get right down to it? Nobody but Mike Maloney. Who's he, to think he can get by with his head in the air?

Of course, he's something besides Mike Maloney. He really does represent the law, and the law represents the might and dignity of the whole people.

We had to crawl a long ways up out of the jungles to create that law and the uniform that represents it. But—pish, tosh—who cares for that, when the comfort or safety of Jip the Blood, or Jim the Penman is at stake?

WHAT DO YOU THINK?

"With a tow row row de row row, the British Grenadier," and all that sort of thing. Well, that may go down in dear old England, don't you know—but not here; not on your life!

Thieves, toughs, gangsters, murderers. Why, they're not such a bad lot after all—not as we Americans seem to look at them.

Of course, we have nearly ten times as many murderers in proportion to the population as they have in slow old England.

I wonder if this "resisting an officer" fad has anything in the world to do with that.

What do you think about it?

ILL-TEMPER

He spoke in anger words that he Forgot would long remembered be;
Ill-chosen words he'd never use
Had he but taken time to choose;
Harsh words, which had he stopped to think
He'd not perpetuate in ink.
Yet in another's mind they'll stay
Indelibly for many a day.

He spoke in haste and all that day
A girl went frightened on her way;
Fretted and grieved and thought of him
As coarse, tyrannical and grim;
Recalled the cruel words he'd used;
Felt she'd unjustly been abused,
And long a bitter memory kept
As late into the night she wept.

Without the hurt that burns and stings,
He could have said the self-same things.
The girl had blundered, but he knew
That he in rage had blundered, too.
A trivial error to correct,
He'd lost his own and her respect,
And let a score of people see
How coarse in anger he could be.

Human Side of the News; Romance of Express

By Edwin C. Hill

One comes across a book now and again whose reading makes one wonder if the American breed has changed as well as the times it lives in.

"Old Waybills," is such a book. It raises the question immediately as to whether American men and women of the present day, and especially the men, could face danger so gallantly, endure hardship so uncomplainingly, as the folk who were building up this country in the 50's, 60's and 70's, that blazing period when the great westward tide was setting in and a new empire was being created on the sunset side of the Mississippi and the Missouri.

FASCINATING EPIC

"Old Waybills" (D. Appleton-Century Company) is the romance of the express companies, so the author, Alvin F. Harlow tells us. It is all of that and a vast deal more. It is as lively a tale of the vivid drama of the making of the West as this writer ever had the luck to come upon, a perfectly fascinating epic of good men and bad, of heroes and scoundrels, of divinely marvellous women and mining-camp drabs.

The whole picture is there of one of the most interesting social cycles the world ever knew, that which transformed all of the United States west of the Father of Waters from a mere hunting ground of the Indians and a feeding ground of the buffalo, to the rich granary of the nation.

This is Mr. Harlow's third book on the romance of American transportation, and it follows logically after his "Old Towpaths: the Story of the Canal Era," and "Old Postbags, the Story of the Mail Service." But without any question the author has found his richest subject in the sweepingly dramatic history of the express companies.

As the express companies grew, so grew the nation. The great moguls of express in the old days—Ben Holliday, William F. Harndon, Alvin Adams, Henry Wells, William G. Fargo—live again in the pages of Mr. Harlow's enthralling book.

The very chapter headings tell the story, as for example: "The Express Riders of '49." "Stage Robbery Becomes a Trade." "The Overland Mail and Express." "The Flying Pony of the Plains." "The Roaring Camps of the North." "Train Robber is Invented." "The Earnest and Efficient James Boys." "The Saga of Deadwood and Young Sam Bass." "The Poetical Career of Black Bart." and so on, alluring, intriguing, inviting titles more than making good their promise to the reader.

THE JAMES BROTHERS

Splendidly documented and indexed, copiously illustrated, this recent product of the D. Appleton-Century Company should give pride as well as profit to its author and publishers.

There is scarcely a famous character of the old West who roes not swagger through its 488 pages, for Mr. Harlow, following the great, lumbering freight wagons of Ben Holliday and Russell-Majors over prairie and mountain pass, paused long enough at every worthwhile stop to tell the tale of that particular habitation, noting whatever of saintliness there may have been and all of the sinfulness which existed in ample plenty.

To this writer his chapters on train robbery, the James Brothers and the Pony Express are the most fascinating plums in the pudding.

It was the discovery of gold in California which sent a crime wave rolling through that state and on eastward, quickly followed by other golden billows from Colorado, Idaho and Montana, and a silver wave from Nevada, Colorado and Arizona, all ministering to cupidity and the lower passions. And then the Civil War came on, further to break down moral fibre, and a surge of crime arose all over the land, to heights hitherto unknown in America.

Seriously, it may be very much doubted if we, living in 1934, in the age of gangsters and racketeers and machine gun banditry, have anything to endure half so evil and dangerous as the crime conditions which existed in the United States for some 20 years after the Civil War.

It was those conditions which led, of course, to a long series of sensational express robberies and train holdups, which produced Jesse and Frank James, and Cole Younger and the Dalton boys.

START OF PINKERTONS

It was those conditions which gave the Pinkertons, America's most famous private detective agency, their first start, by solving (it was a young Scotchman, Allan Pinkerton, who did it) the mysterious disappearance of a package of money from the Adams Express service between Montgomery, Alabama and Atlanta, Ga.

The James Boys came along later, they and their pals, the Youngers. There has been so much controversy over Frank and Jesse James, over the question as to whether they were plain, brutal, murderous robbers, or Robin Hoods, as much sinned against as sinning, that the opinion of the author is interesting.

He finds that the James brothers were normal, happy country boys, such as were found in all frontier and backwoods settlements of the period.

But they grew up in a rough and brutal country and era. Both Frank and Jesse were abused and maltreated by Federal soldiers and sympathizers, their connections being Southern and slave-sympathizing. Both were drawn into the guerrilla warfare of the period and from that it was an easy descent into robbery.

On the other hand they were killers Jesse specially, and Mr. Harlow makes no attempt to palliate their crimes. He merely writes them down as creatures of unhappy circumstances.

Bureaucrats Rebuked

THE NRA received a smashing blow in the resignation of the National Code Authority for the retail solid fuel industry.

The resignation included every member of the Code Authority. It was transmitted to the Recovery Administrator, General Johnson, in a letter which is about the most telling and destructive summary of the vices and weaknesses inherent in the National Recovery Act that has come to our notice.

Here is a great industry, embracing some 80,000 dealers. Its code was agreed upon by its representatives acting in concurrence with President Roosevelt. It was believed to afford a constructive basis for the improvement of conditions in the industry.

The charge is now made, backed by the entire personnel of the industry's Code Authority, that arbitrary changes in the code have been made by NRA officials, accompanied by an ultimatum that the changes were to be accepted or a series of general orders would be issued, superseding the provisions of the code as agreed upon.

IN its letter of resignation, the Code Authority states its belief that there is no hope for an effective administration or enforcement of the code, in view of the vacillating policies, the constant delays in securing vital decisions, and the disregard of understandings originally entered into with the industry at the time the code was assented to.

> "If the fundamental of a code," proceeds the resignation, "are to change with changes of viewpoint and changes of personnel, who utterly lack understanding of the problems of the industry, then this truly is a government of men and not a government of laws."

The business men of America, who well know that it is they who have made the country strong and rich and successful, and not the visionaries and theorists who are attempting to regiment and rule them, will not suffer their business to be run by demonstrated incompetents.

THEY will not give over the direction of industries, which they have created and which they understand, to be petty bureaucrats utterly deficient in an understanding of business problems.

AMERICA WILL HAVE A GOVERNMENT OF LAWS, NOT OF MEN!

She always has had such a government and she is not prepared to renounce it at the behest of the motley company of dabblers in economic reform who have grabbed the loud speakers in Washington.

The action of the Code Authority of the great fuel industry has the highest significance—and, we may add, the most heartening promise of good things.

It means that the sanity of the country is finding itself again—and finding its voice and its courage and its self-confidence.

Their days of baleful authority are numbered. Their power to harass, afflict and retard the business of the country is clearly waning—according to all signs.
